

Paula's Plea for Peace

Diana Silva

Paula stands alone on a quiet hill, watching the golden sun rise over a sleeping world. She whispers a soft wish for harmony to the morning breeze, starting her journey to find others who share her dream.

In the city park, a group of pigeons flutters around Paula's feet, their gentle cooing filling the air. She realizes that even the smallest birds in the city are singing a song of quiet tranquility and hope.

By the clear blue pond, several perch glide silently through the reeds, creating small ripples on the surface. Paula watches them move in perfect rhythm, finding peace in the cool, still water.

Paula travels to a lush bamboo forest where a family of pandas rests comfortably in the dappled shade. Their slow, deliberate movements show her that peace can be found in a moment of rest and friendship.

In her garden, Paula touches the soft leaves of her favorite plants, which grow tall and strong toward the sky. She feels the silent strength of nature as every petal and leaf breathes in the calm afternoon air.

Along the riverbank, Paula picks up a smooth, gray pebble and holds it tightly in her hand. She understands that even the ancient stones, weathered by time, hold a deep and lasting stillness within them.

In the town square, colorful pantomimes and performers make the children laugh with their silent, joyful play. Paula smiles, seeing how laughter and art can bring people together in a spirit of kindness and peace.

As she walks through the streets, Paula sees a police officer helping a lost child find their way home. It is a reminder that protection and care are essential parts of a peaceful and safe community.

The sweet smell of fresh bread leads Paula to the bakery, where the pastry-makers work with flour-covered hands. They share warm treats with their neighbors, proving that simple acts of service nourish the soul.

Finally, Paula sits under a grand oak tree with a poet who is writing verses about a world without worry. Together, they look out at the horizon, knowing that peace begins with a single person and a single wish.