

Luna's Space Adventure

Rhajan Bacolod

One starry night, Luna climbed into her dusty attic and discovered an old telescope tucked away in a corner. As she brushed off the cobwebs and peeked through the lens, a magical golden glow began to swirl around the room.

Suddenly, the light grew brighter and a gentle force pulled Luna right through the telescope and into the night sky. She soared past the clouds, feeling the cool air on her face as she traveled toward the twinkling stars.

Luna landed softly on the shimmering, icy rings of Saturn, which felt like a giant slide in the sky. There she met Sparky, a tiny star who was shivering because he was afraid of how high up they were.

Luna reached out and held Sparky's hand, telling him that even the smallest star can shine bright when they have a friend nearby. Together, they looked down at the beautiful galaxy, and Sparky realized that being brave was much easier with Luna by his side.

They zoomed over to the bumpy moons of Jupiter, where they met a green space frog named Pip. Pip was standing at the edge of a deep crater, looking nervous as he tried to figure out how to jump across.

Luna cheered loudly for Pip, telling him to believe in his strong legs and his big heart. With a mighty leap, Pip soared through the air and landed perfectly on the other side, croaking with joy at his new accomplishment.

The three friends hopped onto a passing shooting star, riding its glowing tail all the way to the red, dusty hills of Mars. They found a lonely little robot who was sadly searching for a missing gear hidden among the rocks.

Working together, they spotted the shiny silver gear tucked under a bright red stone and returned it to the robot. The robot beeped happily and gave them a warm metal hug, making Luna realize that helping others is the best way to make the universe feel like home.

As the cosmic sky turned a sleepy shade of purple, Luna knew it was time to say goodbye to her new friends. She hugged Sparky, Pip, and the robot, promising that she would always remember their incredible journey through the stars.

With a final magical whoosh, Luna found herself back in her cozy bedroom, tucked safely under her blankets. She looked out her window at the twinkling night sky and smiled, knowing that courage and kindness could take her on adventures beyond her wildest dreams.
