Little Prince Akhmet sat on his grand throne, looking a bit bored while his father, the King, discussed important royal matters. He perked up when he heard the King mention how crucial English was for connecting with kingdoms all over the world. A spark of curiosity lit up in Akhmet's eyes; he wanted to understand those faraway lands!

Later, Akhmet tiptoed into the magnificent royal library, a towering room filled with ancient books. Tucked away on a high shelf, he discovered a vibrant, dusty picture book. It was an English book, filled with cheerful illustrations of animals and simple words he couldn't quite read yet, but it sparked a wonderful sense of wonder.

Soon, a kind and smiling tutor named Miss Lily arrived, carrying a brightly colored globe. She pointed to different countries and pronounced simple English words like "hello" and "apple" with a warm smile. Akhmet, with wide, eager eyes, tried his very best to repeat each new sound, his little tongue twisting playfully.

Akhmet practiced his new English words every day, even with his royal pets! He pointed to his fluffy white cat and said "cat," and the cat responded with a happy purr. Then he pointed to his playful brown puppy, exclaiming "dog," and the puppy wagged its tail enthusiastically, barking a joyful reply.

A grand day arrived when a distinguished dignitary from a faraway land visited the palace. With a deep breath and a confident smile, Prince Akhmet stepped forward and greeted the visitor with a clear "Good morning!" The dignitary's face lit up with a warm smile, genuinely impressed by the young prince's thoughtful effort.

Now, Akhmet often sat by his window, confidently reading aloud from his favorite English picture book. He imagined all the new friends he would make and the exciting adventures he would have, all thanks to his new language. The King watched from the doorway, a look of immense pride beaming on his face.
