Sparklehoof, a beautiful unicorn, grazes peacefully in a vibrant meadow. The night sky above is usually full of sparkling stars, but tonight they look dim and sleepy.

Sparklehoof looks up, its gentle eyes filled with concern. It knows something is wrong when the stars don't twinkle their usual bright dance. It decides to find out why.

Sparklehoof bravely steps into the edge of the Whispering Woods. Tall, simple trees with rounded tops loom, and a winding path invites the unicorn deeper.

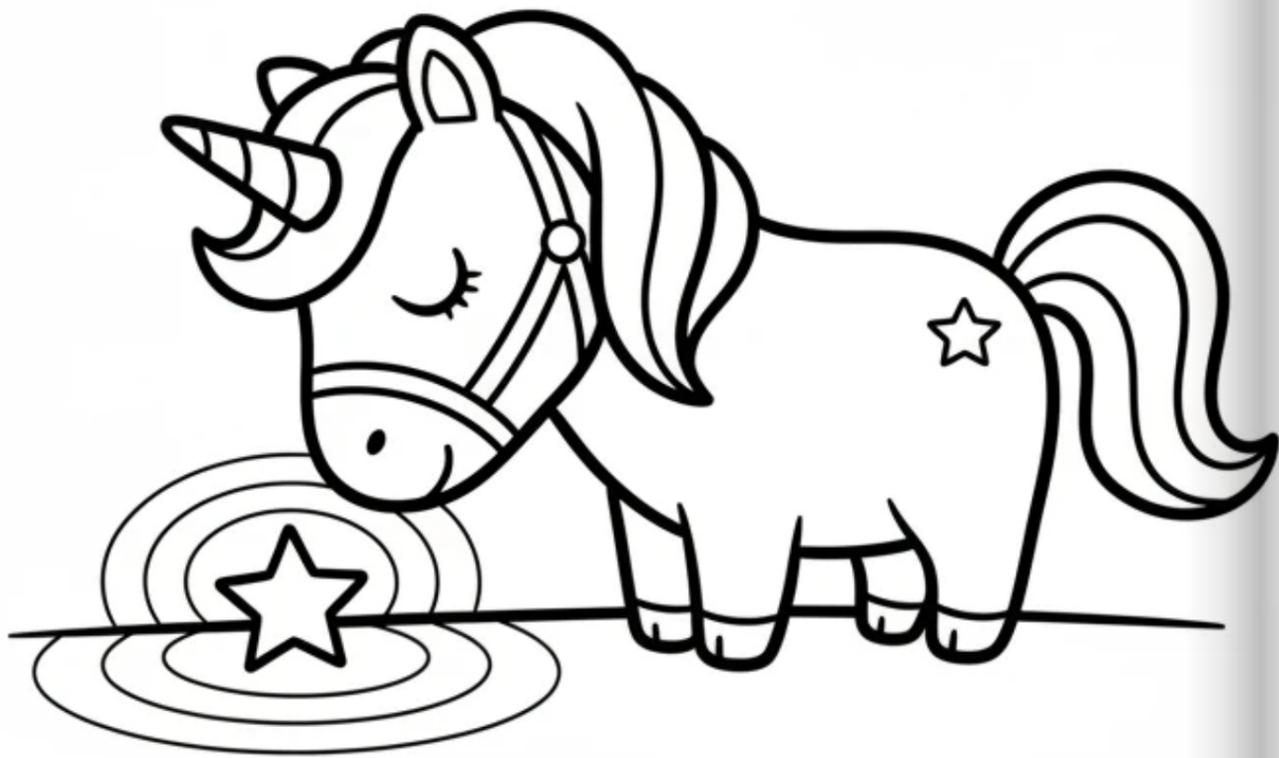

A friendly little owl named Hoot, with big round eyes, perches on a branch. Hoot knows a secret path to where the stars might be hiding.

Sparklehoof and Hoot carefully cross a narrow, curving stream. The water is drawn with simple wavy lines, reflecting the faint starlight.

They arrive at a hidden clearing filled with tiny, simple flowers. In the center, a small, round, fallen star rests softly on the grass, looking sad.

Sparklehoof lowers its head and gently touches the fallen star with its magical horn. A soft, circular glow emanates from the star as it begins to awaken.

The little star floats gently upwards, leaving the clearing. It grows brighter and happier as it ascends towards the night sky.

As the little star rejoins its family, all the other stars in the sky burst into brilliant, joyful sparkles. The night is once again lit with magic.

Sparklehoof stands back in its meadow, looking up at the beautifully bright, twinkling sky. Hoot rests nearby, and all is peaceful and well.
