

The Full Belly Smile

erha rubiana

Leo helped his mother set the heavy wooden dining table, placing the spoons exactly where they belonged. The sweet aroma of baked pie and warm soup filled the air, making his little stomach rumble with anticipation.

Mother brought over the grand serving dish, her smile warming the entire room as the soft evening light filtered through the window. Leo clapped his hands in delight, ready to dive into the wonderful feast prepared just for them.

They ate happily, sharing stories about Leo's afternoon adventures in the backyard and laughing together. Each bite was delicious, and the cozy dining room felt like the safest, happiest place in the world.

Slowly, the clinking of silverware quieted down as their bellies grew happily full. Leo leaned back in his chair, letting out a satisfied sigh while looking at the empty plates before them.

Sitting directly across from the front view, Leo and his mother shared a warm, knowing glance at the finished meal. The plates were completely clean, leaving only crumbs of a wonderful dinner well spent.

With a full stomach and a heavy heart of gratitude, Leo patted his tummy and grinned widely at his mother. The background of the dining room glowed with a soft, comforting vibe, leaving plenty of peaceful, open space above them.

Mother reached across the table to gently pat Leo's hand, her eyes filled with love and pride. The quiet aftermath of the meal brought a serene tranquility to the beautifully decorated room.

Leo yawned softly, the comfort of a good meal making him feel wonderfully sleepy and content. The warm colors of the dining room seemed to wrap around them like a soft, cozy blanket.

Together, they sat for a few more moments, just enjoying each other's company in the peaceful, open atmosphere. The empty space above reflected the quiet, calm joy that filled their hearts after a perfect dinner.

Mother stood up with a smile to help Leo down from his chair, ready to head towards bedtime stories. It had been a beautiful evening of good food, full bellies, and endless family love.