

In My Town, Every House Has a Robot (Except Mine...)

Roshun

Leo walks down a vibrant, colorful neighborhood street in a futuristic Roblox world where sleek, shiny humanoid robots can be seen through every window doing chores, walking dogs, and serving pancakes to their owners.

Jake relaxes comfortably in a lawn chair while his personal robot fans him with a massive palm leaf and feeds him cold Bloxy Cola, contrasting sharply with the chaotic robot parkour happening next door.

Leo sweats profusely while scrubbing a massive kitchen floor with a tiny toothbrush, looking exhausted as his dad casually walks by in socks, tracks fresh mud across the spotless surface, and gives a cheerful thumbs-up before walking away.

Leo stands in the living room with his arms crossed in a dramatic pose, demanding answers from his parents who sit on the couch looking nervously at each other and whispering anxiously.

Late at night, Leo creeps down a dark hallway carrying a flashlight and discovers the basement door left slightly open with a heavy padlock dangling uselessly from the latch.

Stepping into the dark basement, Leo shines his flashlight across a dusty wooden desk and spots a weathered blueprint labeled Project Leo Series 9 Android right next to an old framed photograph of a young boy.

A soft, emotional piano melody echoes as a close-up reveals an old newspaper headline detailing a tragic accident, followed by sepia-toned flashbacks of grieving parents sacrificing everything they own at a robotics laboratory.

Leo stands frozen in the dim basement light, tears welling up in his eyes as he realizes the profound truth behind his parents' sacrifices and the depth of their unconditional love.

Mom and Dad peek anxiously down the basement stairs, terrified that their secret has ruined everything, only to watch Leo drop the papers and sprint upward to embrace them tightly.

The family shares a warm, emotional group hug in the softly lit hallway, realizing that even without a futuristic machine in their home, they have something far more precious and real.