

Jack's Week of Many Jobs

яна ільницька

Jack sat at a long assembly line in a bright toy factory, clicking plastic heads onto colorful robot bodies. While the toys were shiny and cool, Jack couldn't help but yawn as he did the same thing over and over again.

In a fancy salon, Jack held a pair of scissors with a confused look while his customer stared in horror at the mirror. The haircut was lopsided and spiky, making it very clear that hairdressing was definitely not Jack's greatest talent.

Jack raced down a busy city street wearing a navy blue police uniform and blowing a loud whistle. He managed to catch a famous jewel thief, making his week as an officer both thrilling and incredibly dangerous.

Standing perfectly still outside a grand palace in London, Jack looked very sharp in his tall hat and red uniform. However, a crowd of tourists surrounded him, waving maps and asking him very complicated questions about history.

Now a famous reporter, Jack stood on a glamorous red carpet holding a microphone toward a smiling movie star. He loved his new job because he got to meet interesting people and finally be the one asking the difficult questions.

Jack spent his next week as a computer programmer, surrounded by glowing screens and lines of code. It was a safe and quiet job where he could drink soda and play video games whenever he finished his work.

With a mop in hand and a bucket of sudsy water, Jack spent his days making the floors of a giant office building sparkle. It was a simple and peaceful job, though he didn't earn very much money for all his hard scrubbing.

Wearing a bright yellow hard hat, Jack stood at a construction site overlooking a massive bridge being built over a river. Being an engineer was a huge challenge that required him to solve difficult puzzles to keep the roads and bridges safe.

Jack sat in his room looking through a photo album filled with pictures of himself in all his different work uniforms. He realized that every job had taught him something new, even if some were much more exciting than others.

Jack stood before a large bulletin board covered in colorful posters for even more unusual careers. With a curious smile, he wondered if he should try being an astronaut, a chef, or maybe even a deep-sea diver next.