

A Traveler's Guide in Pixel Town

Alaa Sayed-ألاء

Under a bright morning sky, Leo steps onto the pixelated pavement of a colorful bus station. With a warm smile, he walks toward the glass ticket booth to plan his day trip to the historic city center, eager to see Piazza del Popolo.

Inside the booth, a cheerful ticket clerk wearing a sharp blue uniform leans forward with a welcoming smile. He kindly explains that Leo can easily reach his destination by catching either bus number ten or bus number three.

Leo nods appreciatively, curiosity sparking in his eyes as he reaches into his pocket for his wallet. He inquires about the cost of a single journey to make sure he has the right amount ready.

The helpful clerk points out a clear, retro-styled price list hanging on the wall behind him. He informs Leo that a single ticket costs one euro and fifty cents, and it remains valid for a full one hundred minutes.

Envisioning a long, wonderful day of sightseeing downtown, Leo smiles and scratches his chin thoughtfully. He decides to ask about the price of a full-day pass so he can travel without any worries.

The clerk taps quickly on his glowing computer keyboard, the monitor reflecting softly in his eyes. He looks up with a kind expression and lets Leo know that a daily ticket is a great option at just seven euros.

Impressed by the value, Leo begins counting out shiny pixelated coins in his hand. He thinks ahead to the rest of his week and asks the clerk about the price of a weekly transit pass.

The clerk reaches into a rack and pulls out a brightly colored brochure showcasing all the available travel options. He holds it up to the glass, showing Leo that the weekly pass is available for twenty-four euros.

Leo turns around to check the digital bus schedule board hanging near the platform, making sure he does not miss his ride. He asks the clerk for the specific arrival time of the next number three bus.

Gesturing politely toward a detailed timetable posted right next to the outdoor shelter, the clerk provides reassurance. He explains that the bus arrives every twenty minutes and that the complete schedule is always available at the stop.