

The Brave Little Rooster

Duy Thái Đoàn

Deep in a lush, green forest, a fluffy little Rabbit lived in a cozy house made of warm wood, while a sly Fox lived nearby in a shimmering house made entirely of ice. They spent the winter days looking out their windows, watching the snowflakes dance in the chilly air.

When spring arrived with golden sunshine, the warm breeze completely melted the Fox's icy house into a puddle of water. Stranded and wet, the Fox knocked on the Rabbit's door, begging to come inside to warm up by the cozy hearth.

No sooner had the kind Rabbit let the Fox inside than the ungrateful guest turned fierce, snarling and driving the poor Rabbit completely out of his own home. The heartbroken Rabbit sat outside in the cold grass, weeping over the loss of his beautiful wooden house.

A pack of friendly Dogs trotted by and saw the crying Rabbit, promising to help him get his home back. They marched up to the wooden house and barked loudly, ordering the Fox to leave at once.

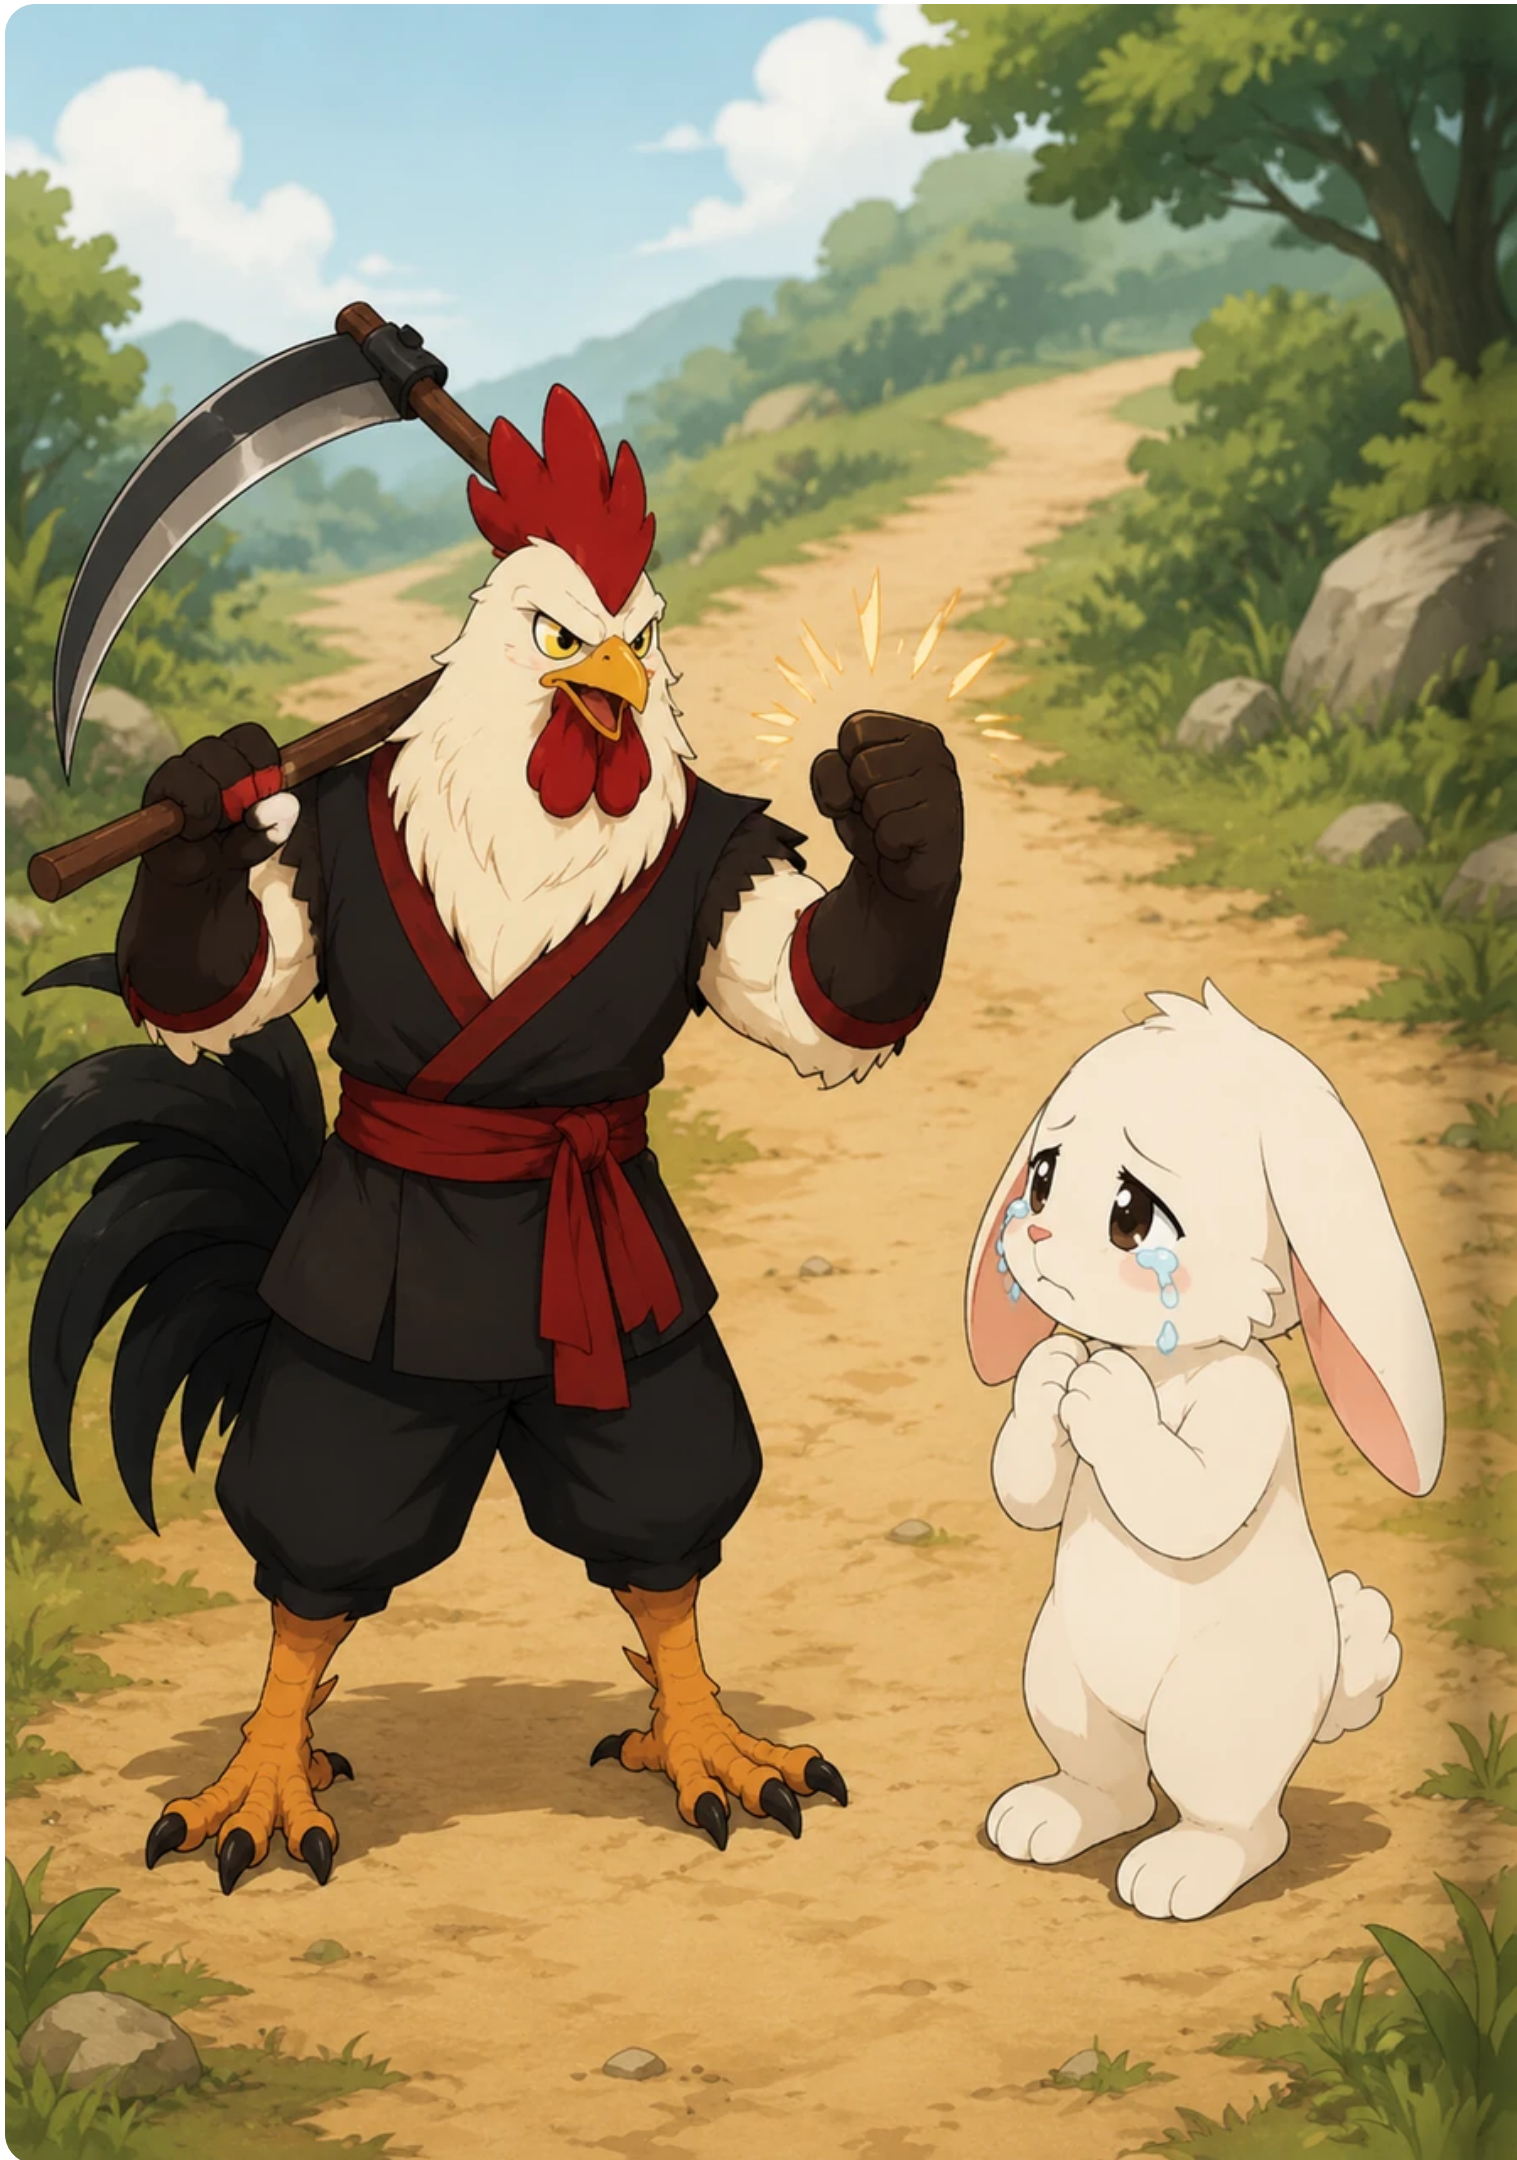

From inside, the fierce Fox leaned near the window and threatened to tear them to pieces if they did not leave. Terrified by the Fox's sharp teeth, the Dogs turned tail and ran away into the deep woods, leaving the Rabbit alone once more.

Soon, a large, gentle Bear walked past the bushes and noticed the sobbing Rabbit huddled under a branch. The Bear puffed out his chest and confidently declared that he would easily scare the wicked Fox away.

The Rabbit warned the Bear that even the Dogs couldn't scare the Fox, but the determined Bear marched to the cabin and roared with all his might. The Fox merely laughed from the warm fireplace, threatening the Bear with his sharp claws until the frightened Bear ran away too.

Just as the Rabbit lost all hope, a spirited little Rooster with bright red feathers and a sharp scythe slung over his shoulder came marching down the path. Hearing the Rabbit's sad tale, the Rooster proudly declared that he would evict the mean Fox.

The Rooster marched boldly up to the wooden cabin, raised his voice, and sang a fiery song about his sharp scythe and his quest to punish the wicked Fox. Startled by the Rooster's fierce confidence, the Fox trembled inside and nervously stalled for time, pretending he was still putting on his clothes.

The brave Rooster sang his warning even louder, demanding the Fox leave immediately. Terrified by the little bird's immense courage, the Fox leaped out of the window and sprinted away into the deep forest, leaving the joyful Rabbit to safely return to his home with his heroic new best friend.
