

Eva and the Cosmic Visitors

Helen

EVA'S STARSTONE ADVENTURE

Eva sat by her bedroom window, peering through her brass telescope at the shimmering stars. The night was quiet and clear, and she wondered if anyone far away in the galaxy was looking back at her.

Suddenly, a streak of violet light painted the night sky, and a small, pearlescent ship drifted gently down into her backyard. It hummed a soft, musical tune that made the grass and flowers shimmer with a magical light.

A round door on the ship slid open with a soft hiss, and three small creatures with large, curious eyes stepped out onto the lawn. Their skin sparkled like stardust, and they tilted their heads in wonder at the sight of Eva's house.

Eva grabbed her flashlight and clicked it on and off, matching the rhythm of the ship's musical hum. The aliens chirped happily and mimicked her signal by tapping their own glowing fingertips together in a friendly greeting.

One alien held out a shimmering crystal that projected a beautiful hologram of a distant planet with floating islands and pink oceans. Eva gasped as she realized they were sharing a glimpse of their home with her through the light.

Eva invited her new friends into her room, showing them her favorite picture books and a model of the solar system. The visitors touched the pages with gentle curiosity, fascinated by the colors and shapes of the world she lived in.

A Cosmic Friendship

They sat together in a circle on the rug, sharing a plate of cookies and a bowl of glowing, star-shaped berries the aliens had brought from their ship. It was the most unusual and wonderful midnight snack Eva had ever experienced.

The aliens pointed to a small, dim panel on the side of their ship that had lost its glow, signaling it was time for them to leave. Eva realized they needed a special spark of energy to power their long journey back to the stars.

She ran to her desk and found her favorite bright yellow marble, which seemed to pulse with a warm and happy light. As she placed it into the ship's core, the entire vessel lit up with a brilliant, golden radiance.

THE END

As the ship lifted into the air, it left a trail of glittery dust across the early morning sky. Eva waved from her window, knowing that she now had dear friends living in the furthest corners of the universe.