

The Backpack That Swallowed Everything

Matilde Silva

Tomás is a curious seven-year-old boy with brown hair and eyes full of wonder who loves to explore his grandmother's attic. One afternoon, he discovers a mysterious purple backpack decorated with shimmering gold and silver stars hidden behind some old wooden trunks. When he opens it, the inside looks like a deep, dark void that seems to go on forever.

Curious to see what happens, Tomás drops a pencil into the backpack, but it disappears instantly without making a sound. He tries putting in a small ball and his favorite toy car, but the backpack swallows them too, leaving him staring in shock at the empty, bottomless bag. He even tries shaking it upside down, but nothing falls out.

Suddenly, the embroidered stars on the backpack begin to glow and blink with a vibrant, magical light. A strange, swirling wind starts to pull at Tomás's clothes, and before he knows it, he is pulled right into the backpack. He screams with excitement and fear as he falls down a giant, spiraling tunnel that feels like a never-ending slide.

Tomás lands softly in the Dimension of Lost Things, a magical land where the ground is made of soft toys and mountains are built from piles of colorful socks. His lost toy car suddenly starts to move and speak, welcoming him to this secret world. The car explains that everything the backpack swallows eventually ends up here in this wonderful place.

The toy car leads Tomás through a landscape filled with giant pencils that stand like trees against a bright, colorful sky. They reach a sparkling river made of liquid colored pencils that flow in every color of the rainbow. Nearby, several pencils are floating in the air, drawing magical stars and shapes that come to life as they move.

They walk through a magnificent city where the buildings are made of giant books that open and close their pages to tell stories to anyone passing by. In the distance, Tomás sees a park where forgotten teddy bears, robots, and dolls are all playing together happily. He is amazed to see that his lost things are not gone, but are living in a paradise of play.

AMIGOS INCRÍVEIS // INCREDIBLE FRIENDS

Tomás starts to feel a bit sad thinking that these toys were forgotten, but a soft plushie approaches him and explains that they are happy because they have many friends here. Just as Tomás begins to miss home, he spots his very own pencil drawing beautiful stars on the ground. He runs to it and picks it up, feeling a wave of joy at being reunited with his favorite tool.

Tomás asks his new friends how he can return to his own room, and the toy car points toward a glowing portal high in the sky. To reach it, Tomás must climb a slippery mountain made of giant, mismatched socks. He laughs as he slides and climbs, determined to reach the light and return to his grandmother's house.

At the top of the sock mountain, Tomás looks back to see all the toys and books waving their hands and pages to say goodbye. They tell him he can visit whenever he wants as long as he remembers them. With a brave breath, he jumps into the glowing portal and feels a sudden whoosh as he is whisked through the air.

Tomás wakes up on his bedroom floor with the purple backpack resting quietly beside him. He looks at his toys and his pencil with a new sense of appreciation and decides to take much better care of his things from now on. He smiles, knowing that if anything ever goes missing, it is simply having a grand adventure in the Dimension of Lost Things.
