

Violet's True Tail

Tristan Willard

Dark clouds loom over a churning sea as a powerful storm lashes against the forest edge. Tall trees bend in the howling wind while massive white waves crash against the jagged rocks on the shore.

The storm has passed, leaving the forest quiet and damp under a pale morning sky. Violet, a small orange fox with a white-tipped tail, stands alone on the sandy shore, calling out into the empty woods with a worried expression.

Violet wanders into a vibrant, bustling forest kingdom filled with busy squirrels, badgers, and birds. She feels small and out of place, hugging her bushy tail close to her body as she watches the other animals play and work together.

Deep in the brush, Violet discovers a soft, discarded costume made of white faux fur with long, floppy ears. She carefully steps into the outfit, hoping to find a way to fit in with the residents of this new land.

Now disguised as a fluffy white rabbit, Violet looks at her reflection in a puddle and adjusts the long ears. She stands a little taller, feeling hidden and safe behind her new mask, ready to face the world as someone else.

Under the shade of a Great Oak, Violet meets a majestic lion named Leo who wears a golden crown. Leo kindly offers her a leather satchel of letters, asking the rabbit to help him deliver important messages across the kingdom.

Violet hops through the forest, delivering a scroll to Olive, a wise owl perched on a low branch. While Olive smiles warmly and Leo watches with trust, Violet looks down at her paws, feeling a heavy weight in her heart from the secret she is keeping.

Beneath the silver glow of the moon, Violet sits by a quiet pond and removes her rabbit ears. She stares at her fox reflection in the shimmering water, feeling lonely and tired of pretending to be someone she isn't.

Suddenly, another fox leaps from the bushes, crying out her name in joy. It is Seb, her long-lost twin, and in the excitement of their reunion, Violet's rabbit costume falls away, revealing her bright orange fur to the gathering crowd of animals.

Leo the Lion and Olive the Owl approach the two foxes with gentle smiles, showing that their friendship was never based on the costume. Violet stands tall with her tail swishing happily, finally realizing that she is loved exactly for who she truly is.