The Lion Who Was Afraid to Roar

Carla Eduarda

Leo was a lion with a magnificent golden mane, but he had a big secret: he was terrified of roaring. While the other lions in the savanna practiced their powerful roars, Leo preferred silence and hid among the colorful tall grass.

Every time he tried to open his mouth to roar, only a tiny, timid squeak would come out. The other animals of the forest, like the zebras and monkeys, would giggle, leaving Leo feeling even more embarrassed and lonely.

One night, under the silvery glow of the full moon, Leo walked alone by a crystal-clear lake. He looked up at the stars and silently wished he could find the courage that seemed to be hidden somewhere deep inside him.

A wise old owl, watching from high in a tree, drifted down to land softly beside the lion. She explained that being brave isn't the same as having no fear, but rather facing what scares us when someone needs our help.

Suddenly, the weather turned and a frightening storm began to break over the savanna, with loud thunder and bright lightning. All the animals scrambled to find shelter to protect themselves from the heavy rain and cold wind.

In the middle of the chaos, a small elephant calf got separated from his mother and became stuck in a deep mud puddle. He struggled to get out, but the mud pulled him down further, and he began to cry out for help.

Leo heard the calf's cries and felt his heart race with fear, as he was also scared of the loud thunder. His paws trembled, and he felt a strong urge to run away and hide in a safe, dry place.

But remembering the owl's words, Leo realized that the elephant calf needed him more than ever. He took a deep breath, closed his eyes for a second, and ran toward the danger, facing the storm with new determination.

With all his might, Leo let out a firm roar to call for the other animals' attention and helped pull the calf out of the thick mud. It wasn't the loudest roar in the savanna, but it was the bravest roar anyone had ever heard.

When the rain stopped and the sun began to shine again, Leo was celebrated as a true hero by all his friends. He finally learned that true courage appears when we act with our hearts, even when we are shaking with fear.
