

Lily's Whispering Words

Zhibek Kalmurat

Lily sits at her desk, surrounded by textbooks and a world map. Her eyes sparkle with curiosity as she points to English-speaking countries, a tiny thought bubble above her head showing her speaking fluent English. She looks a little overwhelmed but full of dreams.

In a cozy corner of the school library, sunlight streams onto Lily as she discovers a brightly colored book titled "Shadowing for English Speakers." Its cover features playful speech bubbles and a friendly cartoon character. She holds it carefully, her face lighting up with newfound hope and excitement.

Back in her room, Lily wears oversized headphones, mimicking the sounds from her "Shadowing book." Her mouth forms exaggerated shapes, and her eyebrows are comically furrowed in concentration. A tiny, determined sweat drop rolls down her temple as she tries to match the pronunciation.

Weeks later, Lily is practicing in a vibrant park, surrounded by chirping birds and blooming flowers. She confidently reads aloud from her "Shadowing book," her voice clear and joyful. Her posture is relaxed, and a big smile shows how much she enjoys her learning journey now.

At a school event, a new exchange student looks confused by a poster. Lily, with a friendly wave, confidently approaches and explains the poster in clear English. The exchange student's face brightens, and they share a grateful smile, highlighting Lily's growing confidence and ability.

Lily stands proudly on a small stage during a school assembly, holding her now well-worn "Shadowing book." She's receiving a certificate for her dedication to language learning, beaming with pride. Confetti falls around her, and her classmates cheer, celebrating her amazing achievement.
