George visits his Grandma’s house, where forty-two colorful cats of all shapes and sizes lounge on every chair and shelf. The house is a whirlwind of soft fur and happy purrs, showing George just how much a favorite pet can mean to a person.

At Grandpa’s farm, thirty-two energetic dogs of various breeds race across the wide green fields, barking with joy. George watches them play in the sunlight, knowing that in his world, a person's tenth birthday brings a bond that lasts a lifetime.

It is the night before George’s big day, and he sits quietly in his bedroom looking at the calendar. He is still nine years old for just a few more hours, and the anticipation of what tomorrow brings makes his heart race with excitement.

George lies in bed under his cozy blankets, imagining what kind of animal will arrive at his door in the morning. He wonders if he will get a loyal golden retriever like his Grandpa or perhaps a clever, independent tabby cat like his Grandma.

The sun rises on George’s tenth birthday, casting a warm golden glow across his bedroom floor. He jumps out of bed with a wide smile, finally ready to join the grand tradition of pet owners in his family.

Suddenly, a thunderous and heavy knock echoes through the house, making the pictures on the walls rattle. George runs to the front door, his breath catching in his throat as he reaches out to turn the brass handle.

As the door swings open, a giant shadow falls over the porch and a puff of shimmering, purple smoke clears away. George's eyes go wide with wonder as he realizes his new pet is much bigger than any cat or dog he has ever seen.

Standing tall and magnificent is a friendly dragon with scales that sparkle like emeralds and wings as wide as the house. The dragon lets out a soft, musical rumble of affection and gently nudges George’s hand with its warm, scaly nose.

George climbs onto the dragon’s powerful back, and they soar high above the town, gliding through the fluffy white clouds. Everyone below stops what they are doing to point and stare in awe at the boy and his legendary green beast.

By the afternoon, George has become the most popular kid on the entire planet, surrounded by cheering friends and amazed neighbors. He smiles proudly beside his dragon, knowing that his tenth birthday turned out to be more magical than he ever dreamed possible.
