

The Little Book of Good Manners

Curated World

Four cheerful children wearing colorful casual outfits wave happily and greet one another under the warm afternoon sun, holding up a special storybook together.

Naledi politely bows her head to greet an elderly village resident with a warm smile, while nearby, Kagiso cheerfully opens the gate to welcome visiting neighbors to their home.

Thato raises her hand to politely wait for her turn instead of interrupting a lively conversation, learning the valuable art of listening attentively to others.

The children enthusiastically help sweep the front porch and set the table before sitting down together to share a delicious family meal filled with laughter and gratitude.

Dressed in neat Botswana school uniforms, the children sit at wooden desks in a bright classroom and play games together on the school playground during recess.

What would you do? Before reading how the children practice patience and kindness while waiting for a shared taxi, a busy community queue, and dining out, think about the best way to show respect to others in public spaces.

The children diligently wash their hands with soap and water and brush their teeth brightly every morning, establishing healthy personal hygiene routines.

Sitting comfortably on a soft sofa, the children practice safe and respectful phone use by speaking politely, keeping screens away during meals, and chatting kindly with family members far away.

Thato and her friends cheerfully lend a helping hand to a classmate who dropped their schoolbooks, demonstrating true honesty and kindness in the schoolyard.

The children proudly display their completed good manners checklist and a beautiful champion certificate, celebrating a wonderful journey of kindness, respect, and growing up.