

The Transforming Water Bottles

มาซึเต้าะ สะมะลึ

Muhayseen and Nur-Aisah find a pile of discarded plastic bottles near the school garden and decide they are too useful to be thrown away.

The two friends imagine all the wonderful things these old bottles could become if they just used a little bit of creativity.

Under the bright, warm sun, they wash the bottles thoroughly until every single one is clean, shiny, and ready for a makeover.

Muhayseen sits down with his notebook and draws a plan, sketching out how the bottles will soon transform into new treasures.

Nur-Aisah puts on her favorite hijab and picks up a paintbrush, ready to add splashes of bright pink, blue, and yellow to the plastic surfaces.

With careful hands and big smiles, the children start cutting and shaping the bottles into fun designs like stars and waves.

Muhayseen uses his favorite colors to turn a large bottle into a sturdy and cool holder for all his school pencils.

Nur-Aisah adds colorful ribbons and some rich soil to her bottle, creating a beautiful hanging garden for their classroom window.

They proudly carry their finished projects to show Teacher Masitoh Samalee at Ban Yuro School, who is very impressed by their hard work.

The children learn that when they use their imagination, old things can always transform into something beautiful and new.
