

The Tortoise and the Hare

Danh Phạm

In a lush, sun-dappled forest, a boastful hare named Tino shows off his speed by racing past a group of amazed squirrels and birds.

Tired of the hare's constant bragging, a gentle tortoise named Toto calmly proposes a race to the great oak tree on the far side of the hill.

The race begins under a bright blue sky, and Tino zooms away instantly, leaving a trail of swirling leaves and a very distant Toto behind.

Tino reaches the halfway point in record time and stops to look back, laughing loudly because Toto is still just a tiny speck in the distance.

Confident in his lead, Tino decides to rest his legs in the tall, soft grass beneath a shady tree and soon falls into a deep, peaceful slumber.

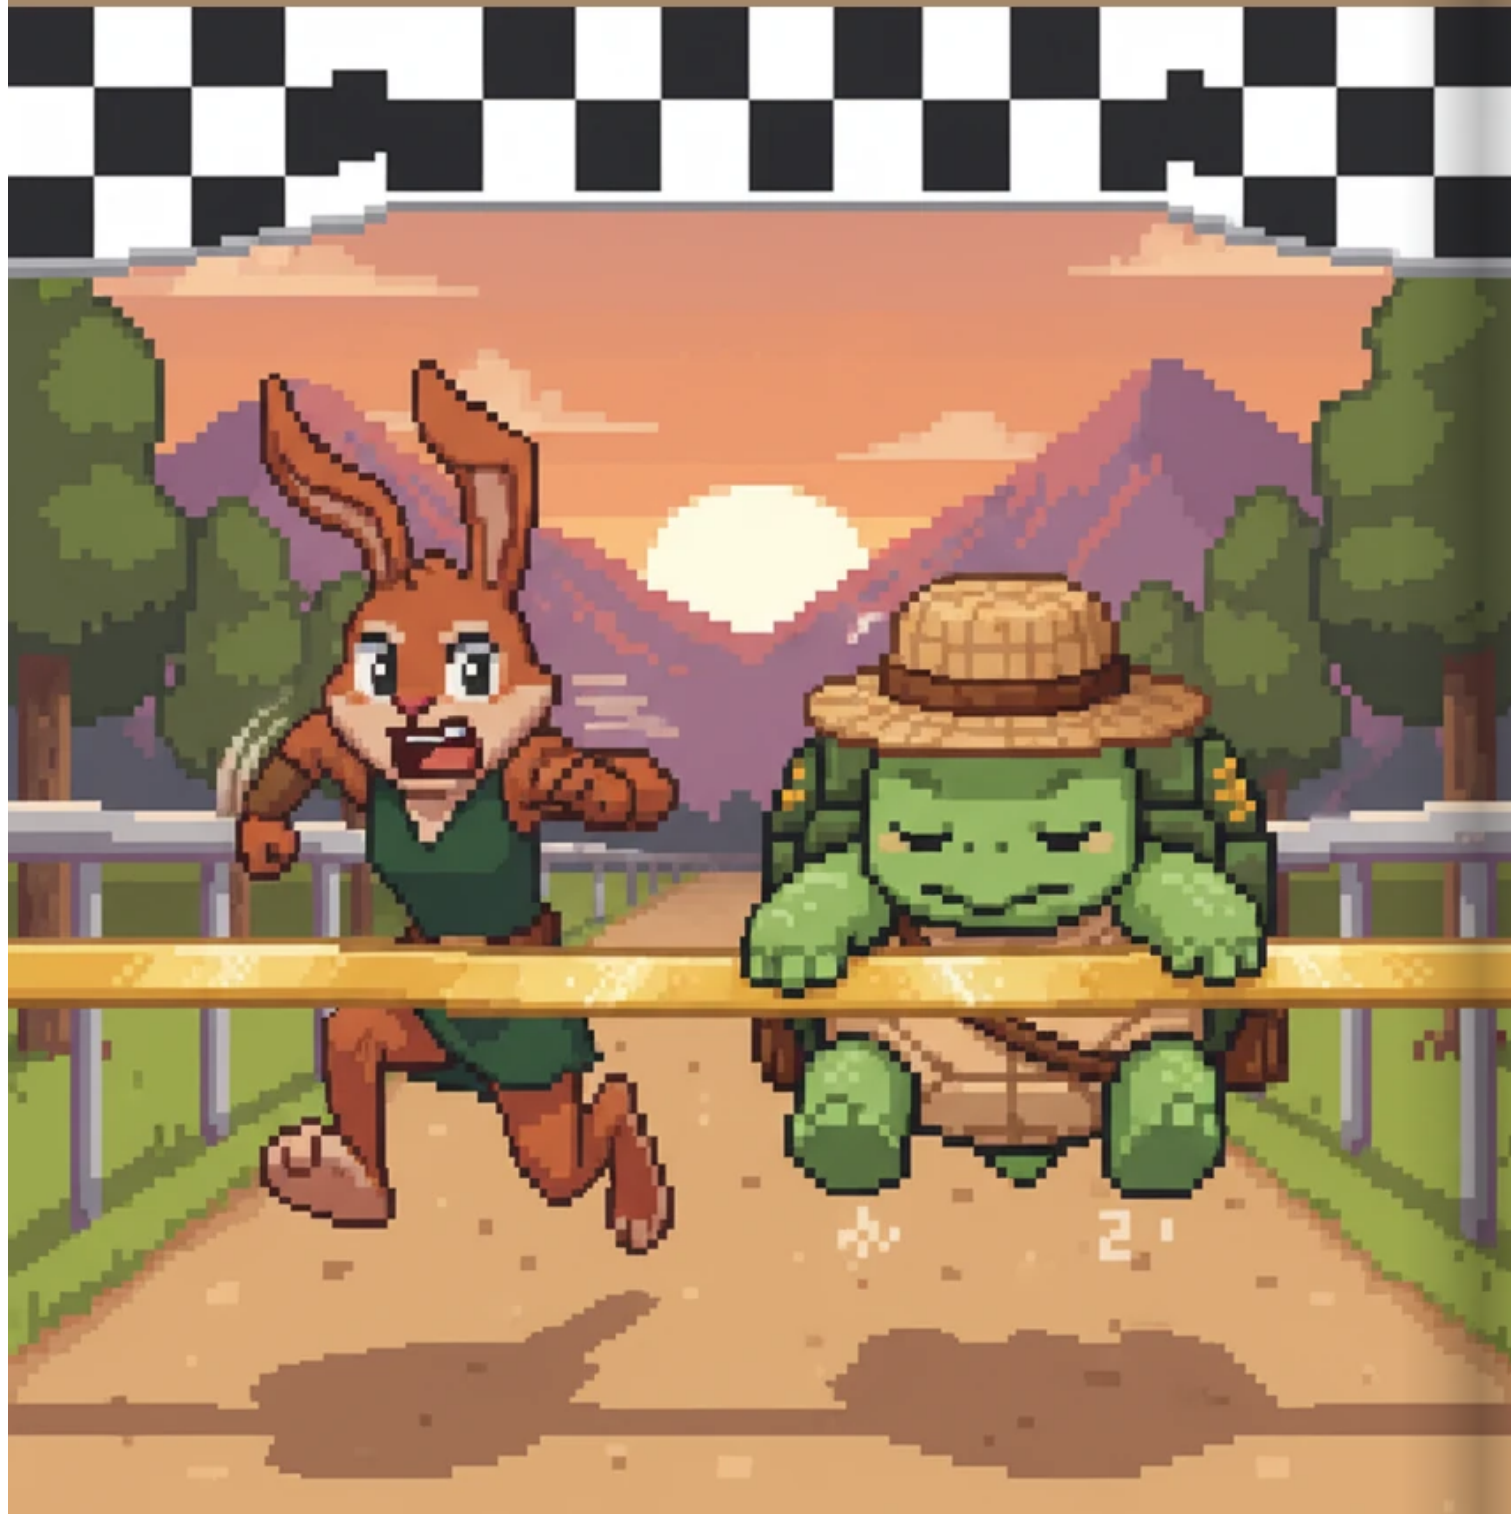

While Tino snores away, Toto continues his journey with steady determination, moving slowly but never stopping to rest or complain.

The sun begins to set, painting the sky in shades of orange and pink, as Toto quietly crawls past the sleeping Tino without waking him.

Tino wakes up with a start as the forest grows quiet and the air turns cool, suddenly realizing that he has slept through most of the day.

Tino sprints toward the finish line with his ears pinned back, but he is horrified to see Toto just a few inches away from the golden ribbon.

Toto crosses the finish line to the cheers of all the forest animals, proving that patience and steady effort are more powerful than speed alone.
