

The Day Edward Found His Voice

Chang Xiong

Edward, a shy boy with round glasses, is engrossed in a book, his face illuminated by the pages. He's sitting cross-legged at his desk in a sunny classroom, surrounded by other students quietly working. The book's cover shows a brave girl and a shy boy on an adventure.

Suddenly, Edward peeks over his book. Across the classroom, Jessica Williams, a girl with a confident smirk and hands on her hips, is loudly directing other students. Her exaggerated gestures show her bossy nature, making some kids look uncomfortable.

Jessica's voice booms across the room, telling her classmates what to do and where to go. Edward tries to focus on his reading, but his brow furrows, and his eyes dart between his book and Jessica. He can't help but feel distracted by her constant demands.

Jason McCullouch, a sporty boy, suddenly stands up and throws his hands in the air, yelling at Jessica to be quiet. The other students freeze, their eyes wide with shock, looking from Jason to Jessica, who now has a defiant look on her face.

Mr. Johnson, the teacher, steps forward with a concerned expression, gently scolding Jessica. But Jessica boldly crosses her arms, sticking out her tongue and making a rude face at the teacher, showing no respect.

In a surprising turn, Edward slams his book shut, standing up with a fiery look in his usually gentle eyes. His face is red, and his fists are clenched. Everyone in the classroom, including Mr. Johnson and Jason, stares at Edward in utter disbelief, their mouths agape.

Edward unleashes a torrent of pent-up frustration, his voice surprisingly loud and clear. He points directly at Jessica, his body language conveying intense anger and disappointment, while Jessica shrinks back, her bossy facade momentarily shattered by his unexpected outburst.

With a final, firm declaration, Edward cuts off any attempt from Jessica to respond. He stands tall, his gaze unwavering, and commands her to return to her seat. His voice is resolute, leaving no room for argument.

Jessica, completely stunned and subdued, quietly walks back to her desk and slumps into her chair. A hush falls over the classroom. Mr. Johnson, still wide-eyed, leans down to ask Edward if he's alright, and Edward nods, slowly taking a deep breath.

Edward sits back down, a sense of calm returning to him. Jason gives him a thumbs-up, calling his outburst 'hardcore.' Jessica, now sitting quietly, looks down at her desk, a small, regretful frown on her face, realizing the impact of her actions and Edward's hidden strength.
