

Lila's Flying Wheels

Aisha Shahid

Lila stands on the sidewalk, admiring her brand-new, shiny roller skates. She feels a little wobbly and holds her arms out like wings to keep her balance while whispering a quiet pep talk to herself.

Her friend Maya joins her, showing Lila how to bend her knees to stay steady and balanced. They laugh together as Lila takes her first small, careful steps on the smooth pavement, feeling the wheels roll forward.

Facing a small hill, Lila feels nervous until Maya reaches out and takes her hand gently. They roll down together slowly, and Lila's fear turns into a bright, happy smile as she realizes she can do it without falling.

At the sun-drenched park, Lila practices skating in big, proud circles around her friend. The wind tickles her face and her hair blows back, making her feel like she is finally flying across the ground.

As the sky turns shades of soft orange and pink, Lila sits on a bench to rest and take off her skates. She looks at her glimmering wheels in the fading light and feels a quiet sense of bravery for everything she accomplished today.

That night, Lila falls asleep with her skates tucked safely by her bed. In her dreams, she glides effortlessly under a golden sun, feeling fast, happy, and free as she rolls through a magical world.

The morning sunlight peeks through the curtains, and Lila jumps out of bed with newfound excitement. She looks straight at her skates and can already feel the imaginary wheels spinning in her mind, ready for another day of practice.

Lila meets Maya outside and tightens her skate straps just right, feeling much more steady than the day before. She pushes forward with confidence, her wheels spinning smoothly and rhythmically on the concrete sidewalk.

They skate toward the playground, where the wheels make a gentle swish-swish sound on the path. Lila leans into a turn perfectly without a single wobble, waving happily to the other children playing nearby.

Under a canopy of leafy trees, Lila glides through patches of sparkling sunlight on a long, straight path. She feels strong, proud, and brave, knowing that her hard work has turned her fear into a wonderful, rolling adventure.