Boo, a friendly little ghost, floated happily on a crisp autumn evening. Tonight was Halloween, and Boo loved the magic in the air. Boo's round eyes sparkled with excitement.

From a distance, Boo watched children giggle and skip, dressed in colorful costumes. There was a tiny witch, a brave knight, and a fluffy bunny, all ready for fun. Boo felt a little twinge of wistfulness.

Boo sighed a tiny, ghostly sigh. Ghosts didn't wear costumes; they were already ghosts! Boo wished there was a special way for a ghost to celebrate Halloween too, beyond just floating. Boo felt a little left out.

Floating softly over a quiet field, Boo spotted something round and orange. It was a small pumpkin, all alone, sitting by itself near a fence. The pumpkin looked a little sad, too, without a friendly face.

Suddenly, a brilliant idea sparkled in Boo's ghostly mind! Boo could make this lonely pumpkin happy. Boo zipped closer, feeling a burst of joy. This would be Boo's special Halloween treat!

Boo gently floated around the pumpkin, making soft, friendly "whoosh" sounds. The pumpkin seemed to feel the happy energy. A tiny, shy smile began to appear on its round face.

Then, Boo noticed some fallen autumn leaves nearby, crisp and golden. Very carefully, Boo gathered a few with a gentle gust of wind and draped them around the pumpkin's stem like a little crown.

The pumpkin now looked splendid! It had a kind smile and a leafy crown, looking like a happy, royal friend. Boo beamed, knowing the pumpkin felt loved and ready for Halloween.

Soon, a few children wandered past the field, their trick-or-treat bags swinging. They saw the friendly, decorated pumpkin and gasped with delight. They knew someone very kind had been there.

That night, under the big, bright moon, Boo floated among the happy children and their joyful sounds. Boo knew that making someone else smile was the very best Halloween magic of all.
