

Timmy's Sharing Day: A Story about Fairness

NUR AMALINA MUNIRAH BINTI ZAHARI KPM-Guru

Timmy the squirrel wakes up to a bright, sunny morning in his cozy treehouse nestled in Greenwoods Forest. Today is a special day because he is hosting a playtime gathering with his best friends near the big oak tree.

Timmy gathers a large basket of shiny, red apples from the orchard to share with his friends, Penny the rabbit and Benny the bear. He counts them carefully, wanting to make sure everyone gets a sweet treat to eat.

When Benny and Penny arrive, Timmy decides to keep five apples for himself and gives only one small apple to each of his friends. Benny looks at his tiny portion with a sad face, while Penny drops her ears in disappointment.

Penny gently explains to Timmy that sharing this way makes them feel left out and sad because it is not fair. Timmy looks at his huge pile of apples and then at his friends' empty hands, realizing his mistake.

Timmy smiles and decides to fix his mistake by dividing the apples into three equal piles so everyone has the exact same amount. Benny claps his paws with joy, and Penny's ears perk right back up in happiness.

Later in the afternoon, the three friends find a beautiful, colorful toy truck stuck in the soft green moss. They all want to play with it at the same time, pulling it in different directions until they hear a small crack.

Timmy remembers his lesson about fairness and suggests they make a fun sandbox timeline where each person gets to drive the truck for five minutes. Penny holds a shiny dandelion clock to help count the fair turns.

Benny happily plays with the truck first while Timmy and Penny build sandcastles, waiting patiently for their designated turns. Everyone gets an equal amount of playtime, and the forest fills with the sound of their shared laughter.

As the sun begins to set, casting a warm golden glow across the forest, the friends sit together on a smooth log to rest. They share a big hug, grateful for a wonderful day filled with kindness, fun, and mutual respect.

Timmy waves goodbye to his friends as they head home, feeling a deep warmth and happiness inside his heart. He realizes that treating others fairly makes friendship grow stronger and makes every game much more fun for everyone.