Mu Ryan

Milo arrived in a brand-new, blocky world, feeling excited. The sun shone bright and round in the clear sky. Everything was made of simple shapes, waiting to be explored.

Milo looked around with wide eyes, seeing tall, square trees and gentle, rolling hills. A path stretched out before them, inviting adventure. This world felt full of possibilities.
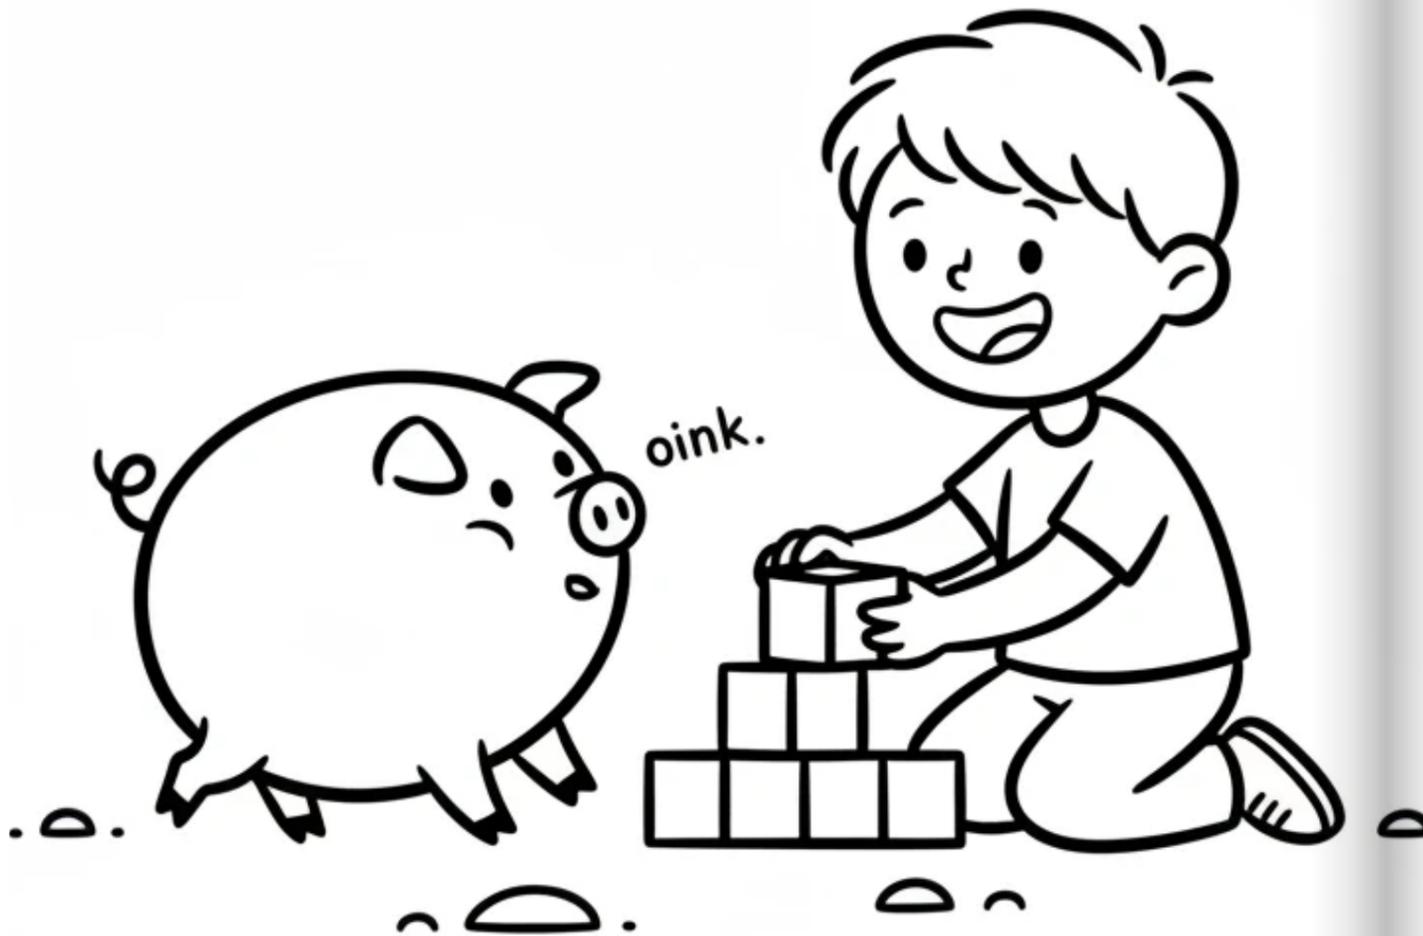

Soon, Milo found a perfect spot near a winding, calm river. It was a peaceful place, just right for building something special. Milo imagined a cozy home right there.

With a simple pickaxe, Milo began to gather blocks from a nearby hill. Tap, tap, tap went the pickaxe against the sturdy earth. Each block collected brought Milo closer to their dream.

Carefully, Milo placed the first few blocks, starting the walls of a small, strong house. One block on top of another, the structure began to take shape. It was exciting to see it grow.

A friendly, round pig with a curly tail trotted over to watch Milo work. The pig oinked softly, seeming to approve of the building. Milo smiled, happy to have a new friend.

Finally, the little house was finished! It had a simple door and a square window, looking very inviting. Milo felt a big sense of pride and accomplishment.

As the sun dipped down, night fell, and tiny stars began to twinkle above the house. Milo lit a torch inside, casting a warm, comforting glow. The house felt safe and bright.

Milo was cozy inside, looking out the window at the peaceful night sky. The friendly pig had curled up just outside, sleeping soundly. The world felt calm and secure.

Morning arrived, bright and new, painting the sky with soft light. Milo stepped outside, ready for another day of adventure and creation. The pig woke up, wagging its tail, happy to greet the new day with Milo.
