Mu Ryan

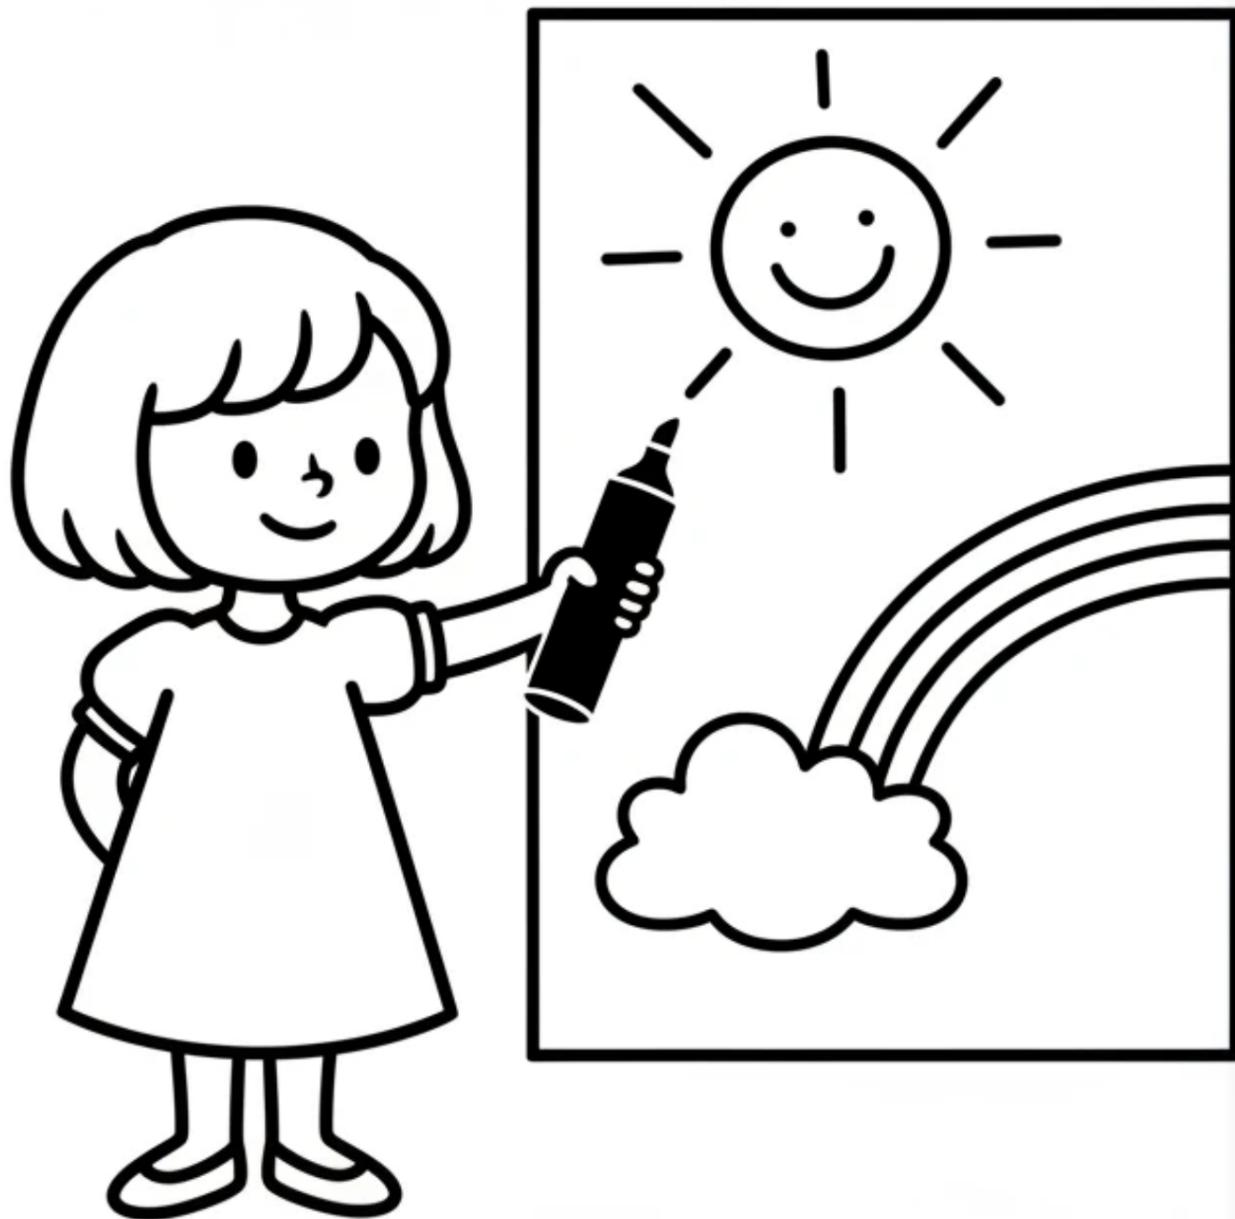

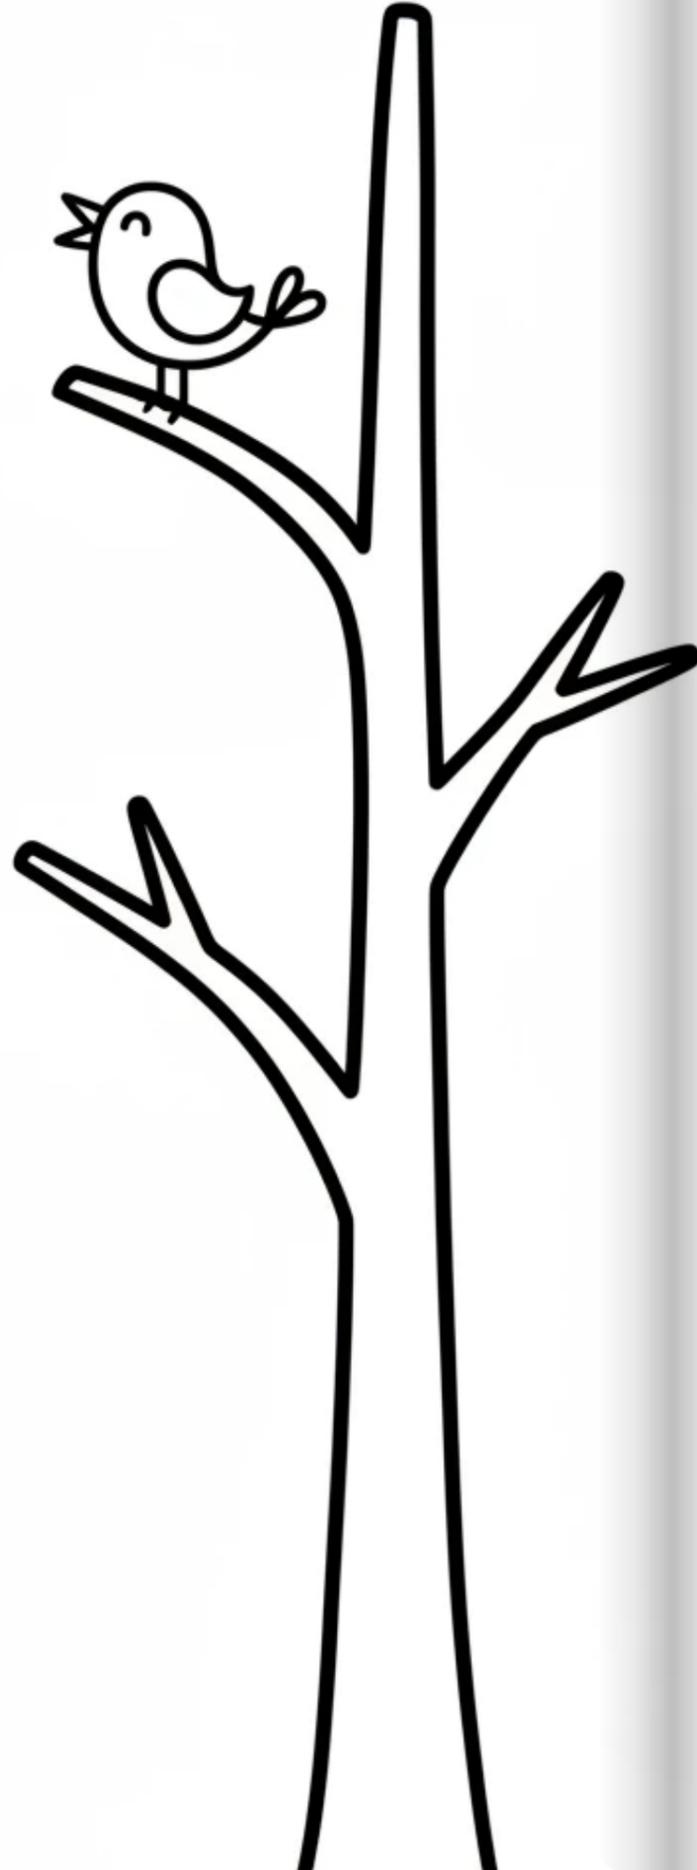

Pip, a small, cheerful character, loved to draw. With a big smile, she would doodle simple shapes on crisp white paper. Circles became heads, and curved lines became wobbly legs.

One sunny morning, Pip had a wonderful idea. What if other children could color her simple drawings? Her heart fluttered with excitement at the thought.

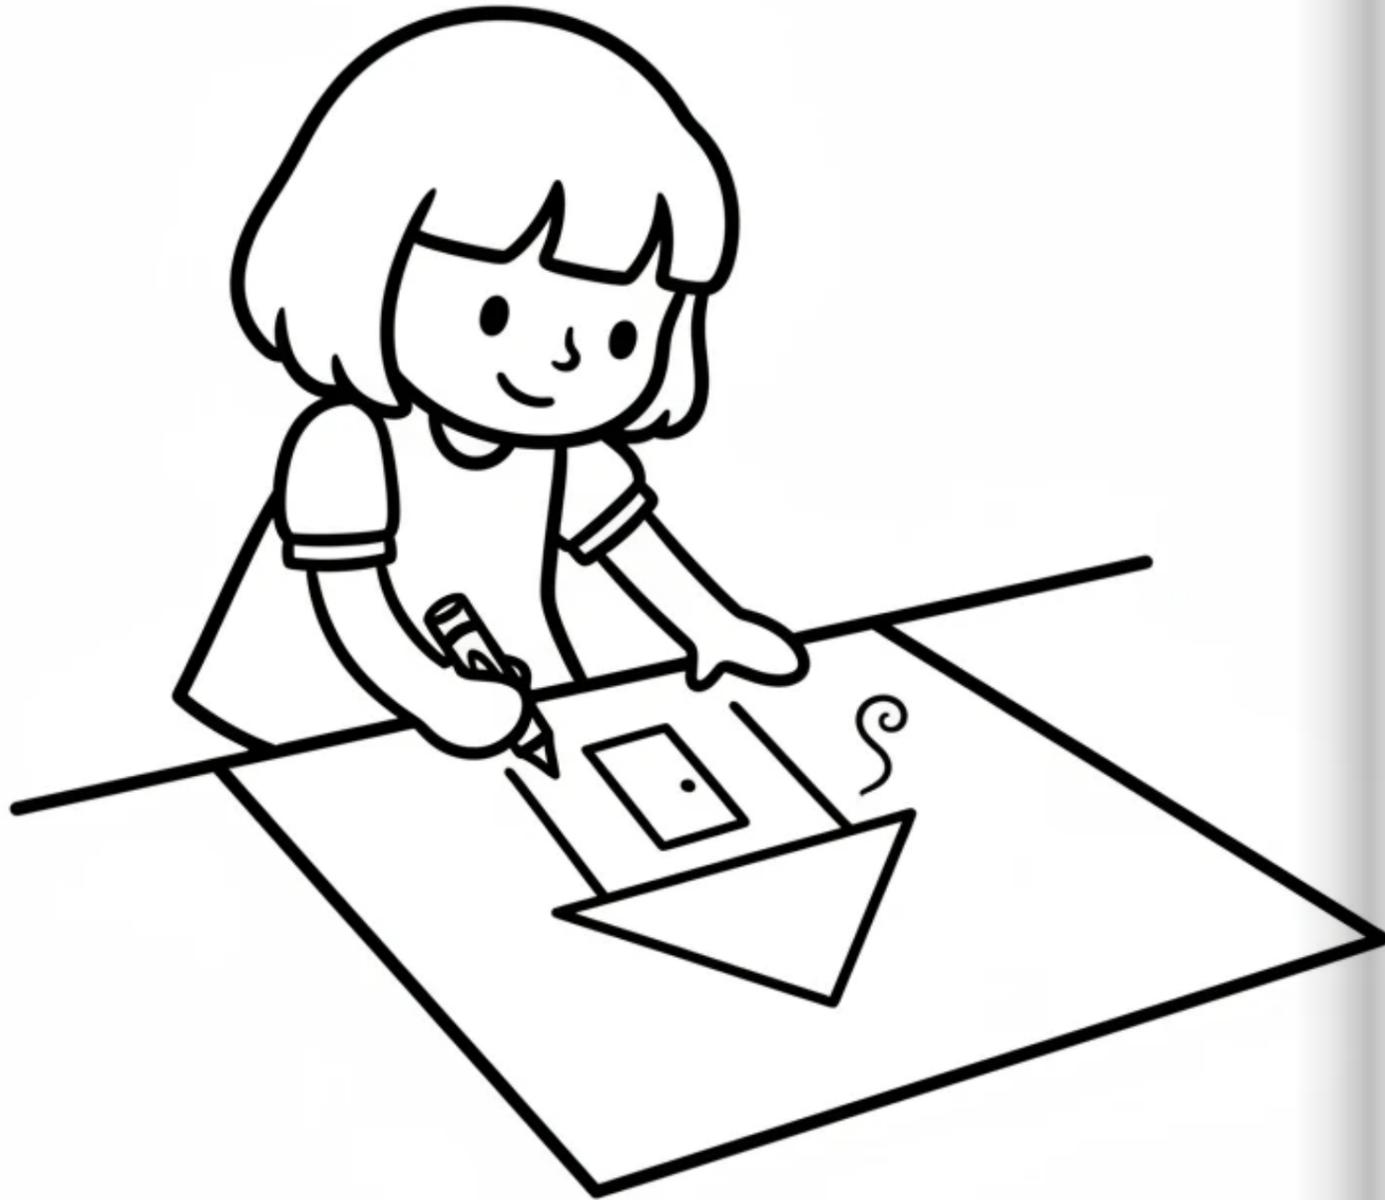

Pip picked up her favorite bold marker. First, she drew a big, happy circle for the sun, with straight lines for its rays. Then, she added a puffy cloud and a gentle arching rainbow.

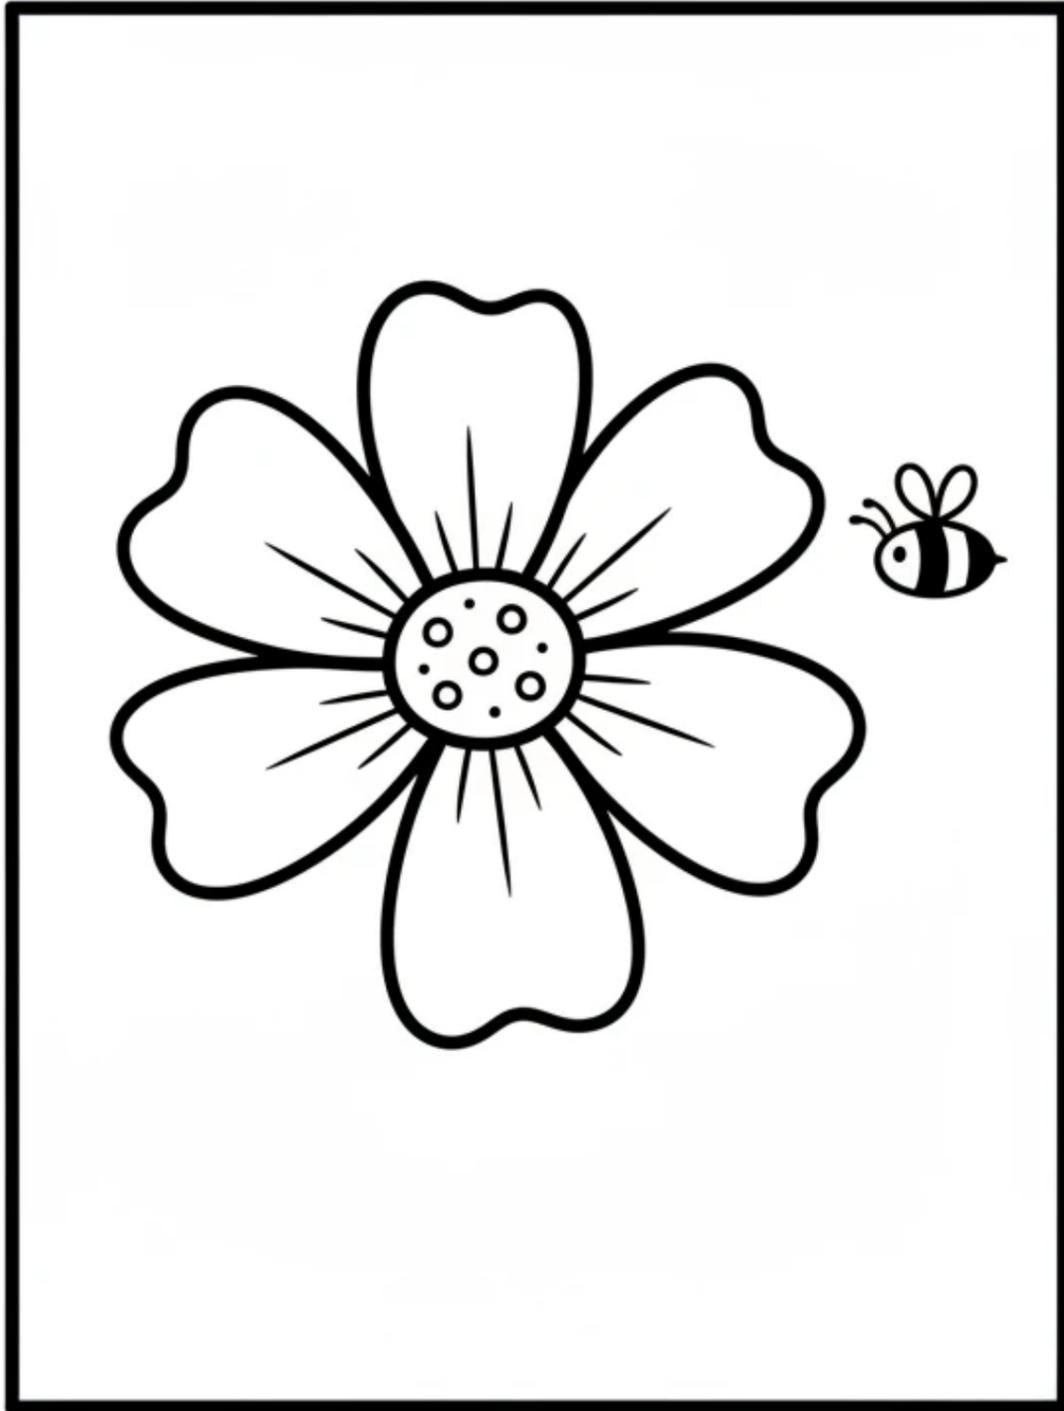

Next, Pip drew a tall, friendly tree. It had a sturdy trunk and a few simple branches reaching up. A tiny, cheerful bird sat singing on one of its branches.

With a flourish, Pip drew a playful puppy. It had floppy ears and a wagging tail, ready to chase a round, bouncy ball. The puppy looked so happy!

Pip imagined a cozy home. She drew a square house with a pointy roof and a tiny wisp of smoke curling from the chimney. A welcoming door waited to be colored.

Then, a beautiful flower bloomed on her page. It had a round center and a few gentle petals, with a busy little bee flying nearby. The flower looked so inviting.

Pip carefully laid out all her finished drawings. Each one was a simple, bold outline, waiting for someone to add bright, joyful colors. They were perfect for little hands.

With a skip and a jump, Pip shared her creations. "Look!" she exclaimed, "These are free printables for everyone to color!" She hoped they would bring much joy.

All around the world, children received Pip's wonderful drawings. They picked up their crayons and markers, filling the simple shapes with every color imaginable. Pip smiled, knowing her art brought happiness.
