

The Little Seed with a Big Dream

bouchra btra

Deep underground, nestled in the dark, lived a tiny seed named Pip. Pip was smaller than all the other seeds, but he held a very big dream in his heart.

"I want to grow taller than the tallest tree!"
Pip whispered to himself one day. "I want to touch the clouds!"

Just then, a warm ray of sunshine peeked through the soil. "Hello, little seed," the sunbeam said. "I hear you have a big dream."

Pip smiled, feeling the warmth. "I do! I want to grow so big! But I'm just a tiny seed."

The sunbeam chuckled. "Even the tallest trees started as tiny seeds. You just need a little sunshine, a little rain, and a lot of belief in yourself."

Soon, gentle raindrops began to fall. Pip drank them up, feeling himself swell. He pushed a tiny root down into the earth.

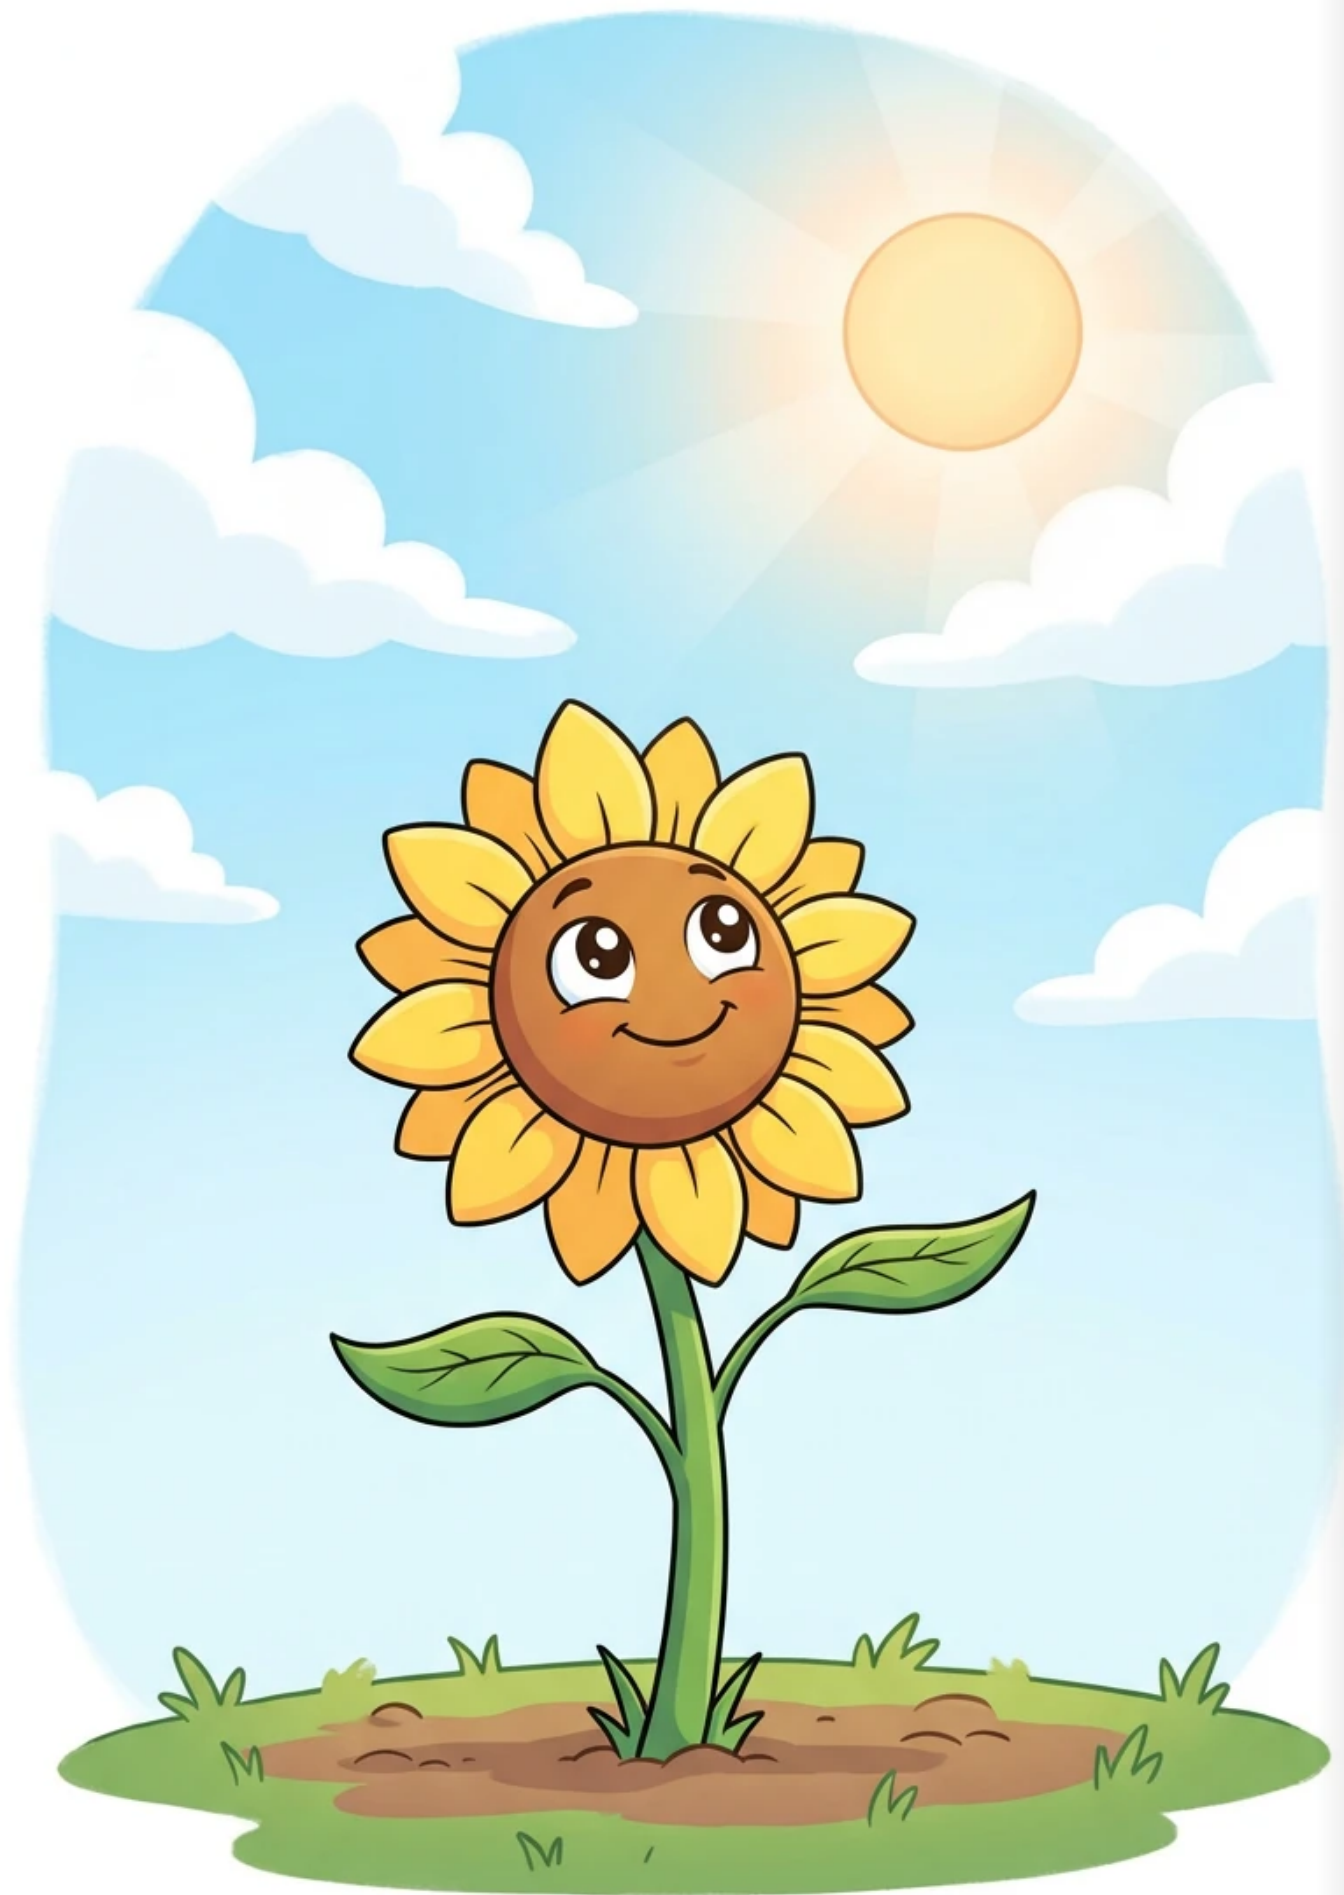

Slowly, slowly, Pip began to sprout. A tiny green shoot poked its way through the soil, reaching for the sun.

The other plants in the garden welcomed Pip. "Welcome!" they chirped. "We're so glad you're here!"

Pip grew taller and stronger each day, his leaves unfurling in the sunlight. He wasn't the tallest plant yet, but he was growing!

Finally, Pip blossomed into a beautiful sunflower, his face turned towards the sky. He may not have touched the clouds, but he had reached for his dream, and that was all that mattered.
