

Penny Pig's Big Race

Beata Andersson

In a lively little schoolyard, there lived a very self-satisfied rabbit named Barnaby who loved to show off. Every single day, he wore the cleanest, shiniest, and brightest shoes anyone had ever seen.

In the very same classroom sat a little pig named Penny, who could not help but stare at the rabbit's beautiful footwear. She felt a deep pang of envy every time Barnaby marched past her desk, making his shoes sparkle in the sunlight.

Penny lived near a squelchy, muddy pond, which made her realize she could never keep such pristine shoes clean. She looked down at her own feet with a heavy sigh, believing she would never match her friend's grand style.

One sunny afternoon during recess, the students gathered together as a grand racing competition was announced to find the fastest runner. The playground buzzed with excitement, but Penny felt a sudden wave of panic wash over her.

The frightened little pig trembled, filled with doubt because her simple, worn-out shoes looked nothing like the rabbit's high-tech sneakers. She worried that everyone would laugh at her if she tried to compete against such perfect gear.

When the day of the big race finally arrived, Penny took a deep breath and decided to push her fears aside. She stepped onto the starting line, standing bravely right next to the confident, grinning rabbit.

The starting whistle blew loudly, and Penny bolted forward with everything she had, completely forgetting about her old shoes. As her feet pounded against the dirt, she remembered her mother's wise words to never give up and always try her best.

With her eyes locked onto the horizon, Penny focused entirely on the joy of running and the thrill of being a winner. She poured all her energy into each powerful stride, leaving her doubts behind in a cloud of dust.

As she dashed across the finish line in first place, the entire crowd erupted into gasps of pure astonishment. Nobody could believe their eyes as they looked at Penny, who stood breathless and triumphant at the front.

Everyone gathered around the little pig, completely amazed by her incredible speed and spirit. They stared in wonder, unable to comprehend how Penny Pig had managed to outrun the proud rabbit and his legendary super shoes.