

The Calm Rabbit and the Loud Jungle

Govind Taili

In the heart of a bustling, colorful jungle lived Rosie, a small rabbit with a big, calm heart. While parrots squawked and monkeys chattered, Rosie always moved with a gentle hop and a quiet smile. Her peaceful presence was a sweet contrast to the jungle's usual noisy hustle and bustle.

One sunny morning, chaos erupted near the tallest banana tree. A group of rowdy monkeys, led by cheeky Chimp, were squabbling fiercely over the juiciest bunch of bananas. Their loud screeches and frantic grabs sent bananas flying everywhere, creating a slippery, yellow mess on the jungle floor.

Hearing the ruckus, a grumpy Grizzly Bear and a bossy Boar rushed over, thinking they could fix things with their loud shouts. Grizzly roared at the monkeys to share, while Boar tried to push them apart with his snout. Their angry intervention only made the situation worse, turning the banana dispute into an even bigger, noisier tangle.

Rosie, watching from a safe distance, didn't shout or push. Instead, she quietly observed the flying bananas and the frustrated monkeys. A thoughtful twinkle appeared in her eye as she noticed a long, sturdy vine dangling nearby. She began to formulate a clever, peaceful plan.

With soft steps, Rosie hopped closer to the commotion, her voice a gentle whisper amidst the pandemonium. "Excuse me, friends," she softly chirped, pointing to the vine. "What if we used this vine to gently lower the bananas, so everyone can have a turn without all the tumbling?"

The monkeys, momentarily stunned by Rosie's calm suggestion, paused their squabble. Chimp, still clutching a banana, looked at Rosie, then at the vine, then at his fellow monkeys. He cautiously agreed to try her idea, and together, they carefully used the vine to retrieve the remaining bananas.

Soon, the monkeys were happily sharing their bananas, the mess was cleared, and the jungle returned to a cheerful hum. The other animals watched in awe, surprised that a simple, calm idea had worked wonders where their loud efforts had failed. But before long, new problems began to brew.

Later that afternoon, a mighty Elephant named Ellie and a stubborn Rhino named Rory were locked in a fierce argument over the main watering hole. Ellie trumpeted loudly about her turn, while Rory snorted and splashed, refusing to move. Their angry standoff prevented any other thirsty animals from getting a drink.

Rosie, seeing the growing tension, calmly approached the two giants. "Perhaps," she suggested with a kind smile, "we could take turns, or even work together to dig a smaller, temporary pool nearby? That way, everyone stays cool and hydrated without any more fuss."

Ellie and Rory, embarrassed by their earlier anger, considered Rosie's thoughtful words. They realized that calm cooperation was far better than noisy confrontation. From that day on, whenever a problem arose, the jungle animals would first look for Rosie, knowing her peaceful wisdom was the strongest solution of all.