

Barnaby's Berry Big Heart

Joanne Sze

Barnaby Bear, a fluffy brown bear with a big smile, is excitedly picking bright red berries from a bush in a sunny, green meadow. His eyes sparkle with joy as he carefully plucks each juicy berry, placing it into a small basket. Birds chirp happily in the background, and colorful wildflowers dot the landscape around him.

Barnaby triumphantly carries a giant, overflowing basket of berries, almost as big as himself, back to his cozy hollow log. His cheeks are puffed out with pride, and he walks with a bouncy step, leaving a trail of a few dropped berries behind him. The sunbeams filter through the trees, making the berries gleam.

Barnaby sits inside his hollow log, surrounded by his enormous pile of berries. He munches on them one by one, but his big, expressive eyes look a little sad and lonely. Even with all the delicious berries, the quiet space feels empty, and his smile has faded.

Outside his log, just a short distance away, Rosie Rabbit and Freddie Fox are playing a cheerful game of tag among giant, whimsical mushrooms. Rosie giggles as she hops, and Freddie wags his bushy tail, their faces full of pure delight and friendship. Bright flowers bloom around them, adding to the joyful scene.

Rosie Rabbit and Freddie Fox pause their game, their ears drooping slightly and their smiles turning into a soft frown. They look towards Barnaby's log, catching a glimpse of his abundant berries. They sigh, wishing they had some tasty treats to share with each other.

Barnaby peeks out from his log, watching his friends. He sees their longing looks and then glances back at his own huge pile of berries. A tiny lightbulb seems to pop above his head, and a warm, thoughtful smile spreads across his face. He realizes that sharing might make everyone, including him, feel much happier.

With a newfound determination, Barnaby carefully scoops a generous pile of berries into his paws, making sure not to drop any. He takes a deep breath and waddles out of his log, his steps a little wobbly but full of courage. His big, happy grin returns as he heads towards Rosie and Freddie.

Barnaby approaches Rosie Rabbit and Freddie Fox, who gasp with wide, surprised eyes when they see him and his berry-filled paws. Their sad faces instantly transform into huge, joyful smiles. They hop and wag their tails with excitement, eagerly looking at the delicious offering.

All three friends are now gathered around the berry pile, happily munching and giggling together. Barnaby, Rosie, and Freddie share stories and laughter, their faces bright with joy. They take turns picking the juiciest berries, making sure everyone gets plenty.

Barnaby sits contentedly with his friends, his heart feeling as full and warm as his tummy. He watches Rosie and Freddie enjoy the last few berries, knowing that sharing his treats made their day, and more importantly, made his own day much brighter and happier. He learned that moments shared are the sweetest of all.
