

Pachy's Hard Head and the Secret Star-Fruit Grove

박창희

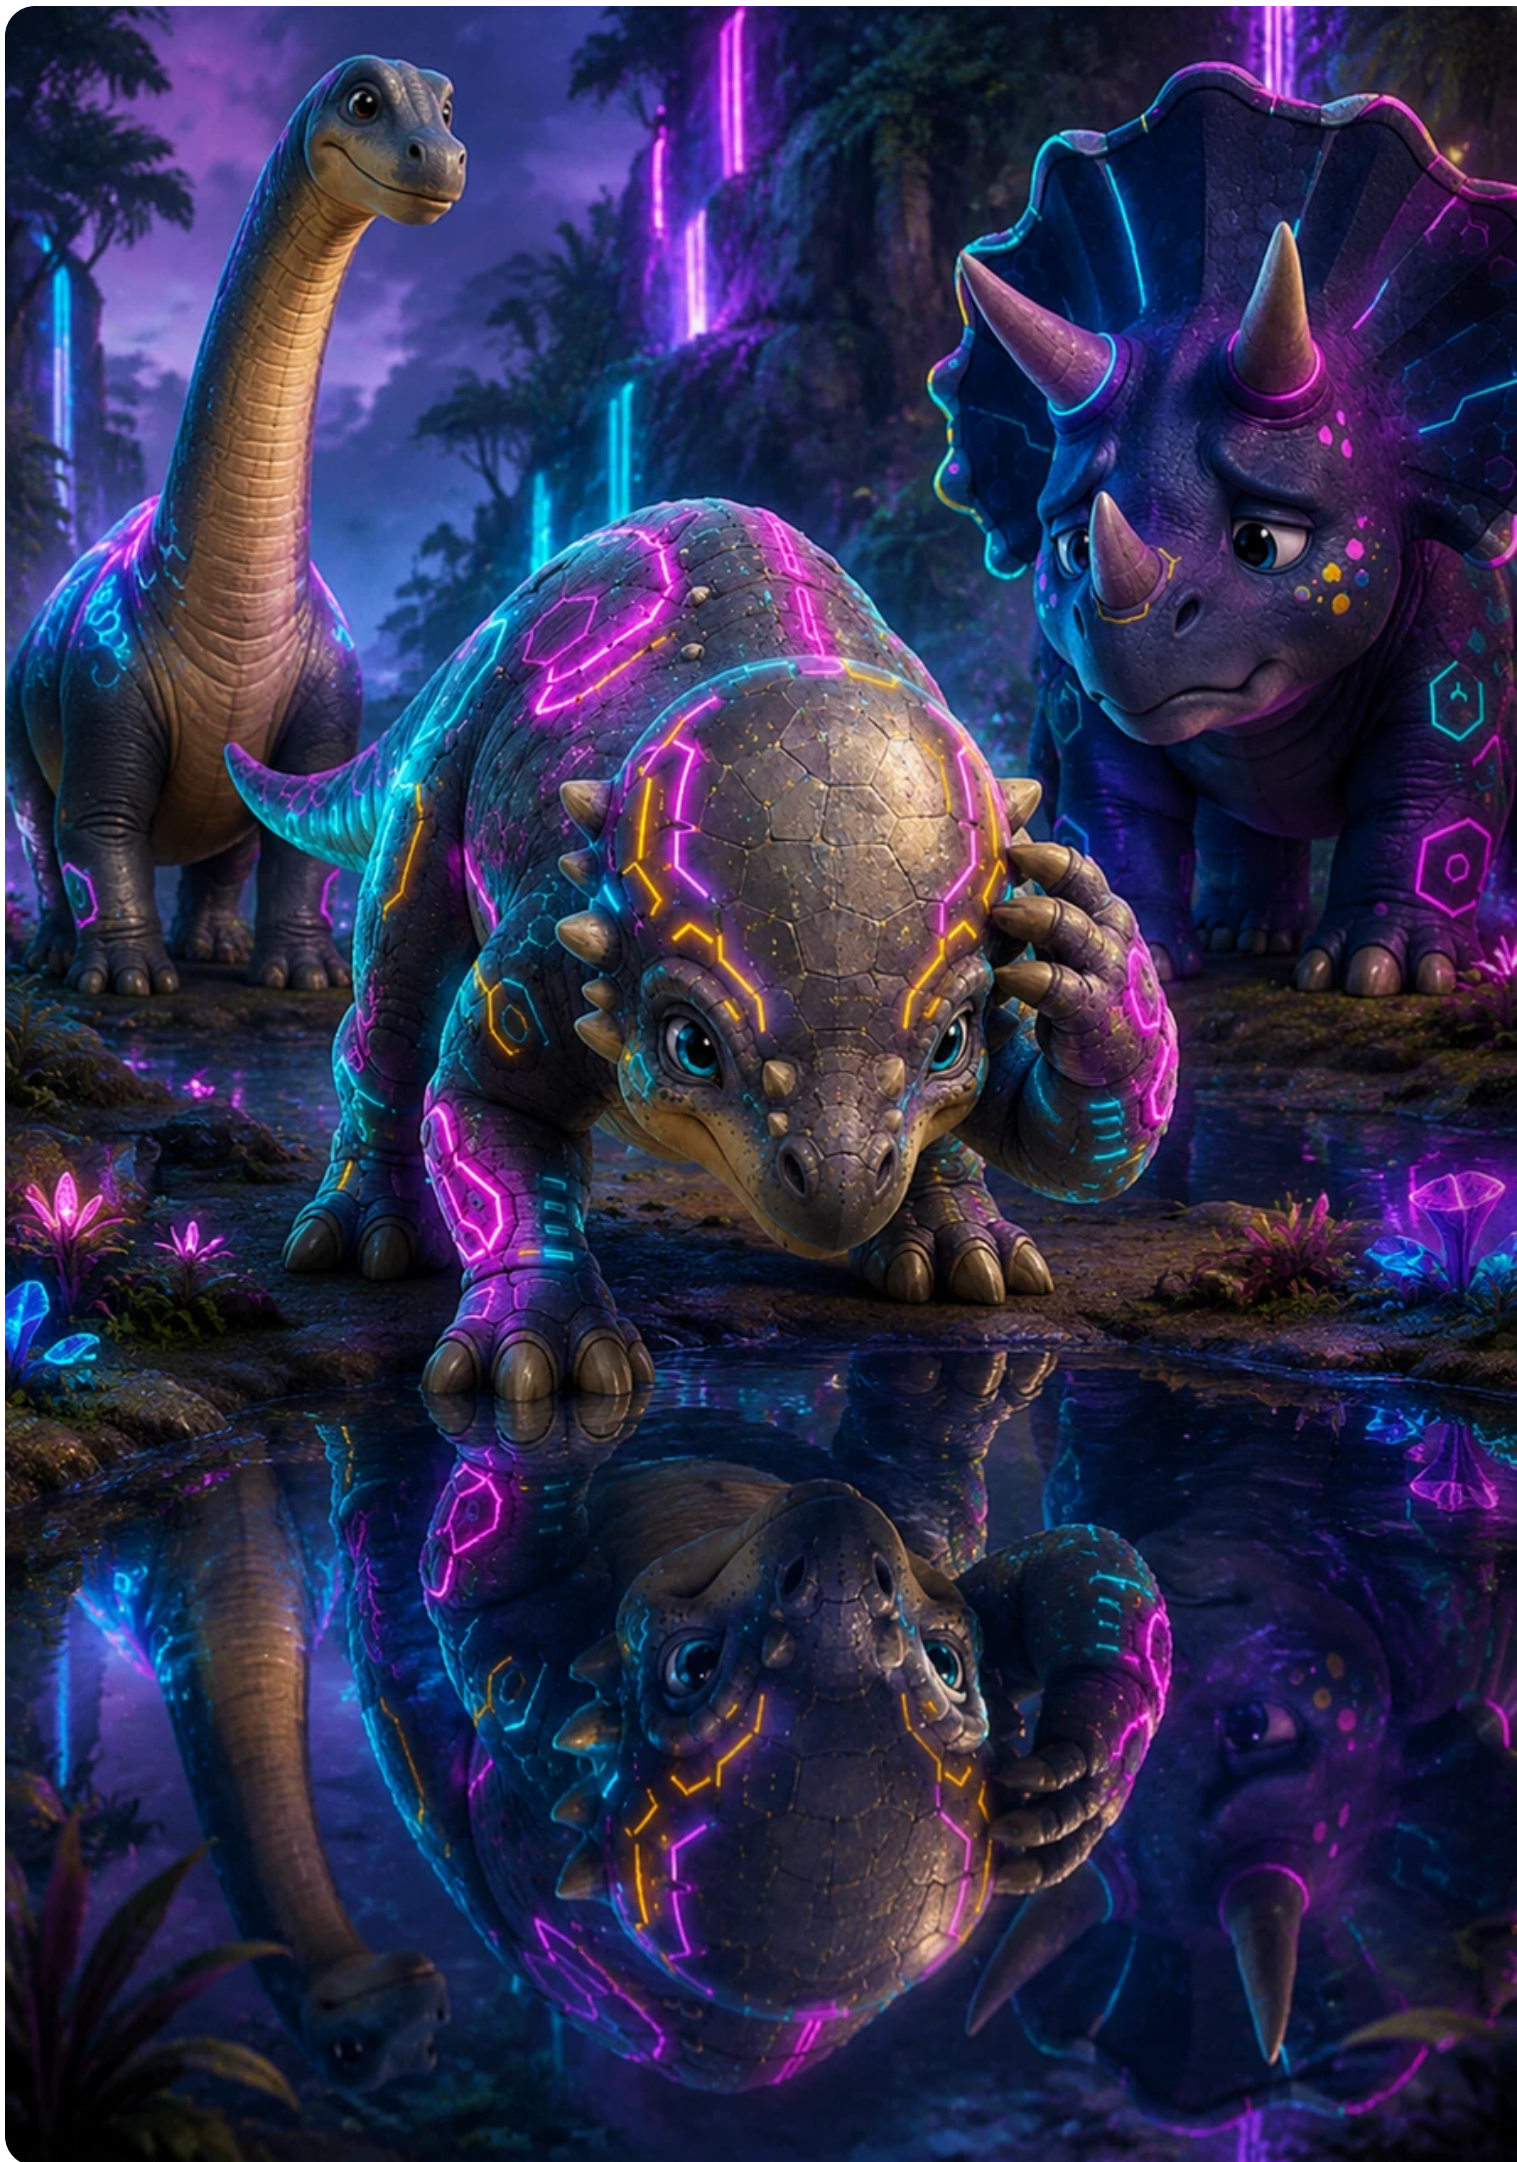

In a vibrant valley filled with giant ferns and sparkling streams, lived a young Pachycephalosaur named Pachy. Although he had a very hard, dome-shaped head, Pachy was the gentlest dinosaur in the forest and loved watching colorful butterflies.

One morning, Pachy found his friend Toti the Triceratops staring sadly at a massive pile of fallen rocks. The rocks were blocking the only path to the Sunny Meadow where the tenderest grass and sweetest clovers grew.

Brani the Brachiosaurus joined them, tilting her long neck toward the high cliffs. She told them about a secret grove of glowing star-fruits hidden just behind the boulders, but even she was not strong enough to move the heavy stones.

Pachy looked at his reflection in a clear pond and touched his sturdy, thick head. He realized that while he wasn't the biggest dinosaur, he had a special gift that might just be strong enough to move the obstacles for his friends.

Pachy stepped forward and asked his friends to stand back safely. He took a deep breath, braced his strong legs against the mossy earth, and prepared to show his friends what a brave Pachycephalosaur could do.

With a determined grunt, Pachy pressed his hard head against the largest boulder and pushed with all his might. The heavy stone groaned and finally began to roll away, bit by bit, as Pachy kept his head down and his heart full of hope.

Seeing Pachy's bravery, Stego the Stegosaurus used his powerful spiked tail to sweep away the smaller pebbles and dirt. The friends worked together in perfect harmony, cheering each other on as the path finally began to open.

As the last rock rolled away, a magnificent hidden grove was revealed, where golden star-fruits hung from every branch like little lanterns. The dinosaurs gasped in awe at the beautiful sight and the sweet, honey-like aroma that filled the air.

Pachy and his friends spent the afternoon feasting on the delicious fruits and playing games in the sunshine of the hidden grove. Pachy felt incredibly proud that his hard head had helped his friends discover such a wonderful and magical place.

As the stars began to twinkle in the night sky, the tired but happy friends snuggled together to sleep under the giant leaves. Pachy closed his eyes with a big smile, knowing that his special strength was a wonderful gift for helping the friends he loved.
