

Aarav and the Wonders of India

AAKANKSHA APTE ARORA

Little Aarav wakes up with excitement as he puts on a bright orange badge shaped like the map of India. Today, his school is celebrating National Pride Day, and he cannot wait to share all the wonderful things about his country. He holds his drawing book tightly, eager to fill every page with India's splendid treasures.

First, Aarav looks up at the grand wall map in his classroom showing the whole nation. He traces the snowy Himalayan mountains at the top, down to the sunny ocean blue at the southern tip. India is big, beautiful, and full of different places and smiling faces living together in harmony.

Aarav gently unfolds the vibrant Indian flag, admiring its brilliant colors. He learns that saffron stands for courage, white for peace, and green for growth, with the navy-blue Ashoka Chakra spinning at its center. Holding the tricolor high fills his heart with immense joy and pride.

Next, Aarav draws the national bird, the graceful peacock, dancing under a light rain. Its long tail feathers shimmer with royal blues and emerald greens like a galaxy of shiny stars. Aarav marvels at how every feather works together to create such breathtaking beauty.

Turning the page, Aarav paints a mighty Bengal tiger strolling proudly through the lush green jungle. With bold black stripes and golden eyes, the tiger shows strength and confidence. Aarav stands tall and remembers that he too can be brave and gentle every day.

Aarav then colors a magnificent banyan tree, the national tree of India, with branches spreading wide like open arms. Its strong roots reach deep into the earth, giving shade and shelter to birds, animals, and tired travelers. It reminds him how love and kindness bring everyone together as one big family.

In his classroom, Aarav and his friends gather around to share delicious traditional treats from every region of India. From crispy jalebis to soft rasgullas, each treat is unique, yet they all bring sweet smiles to everyone's faces. They laugh together, celebrating how different flavors make life so wonderful.

Together, the children perform a vibrant dance wearing colorful traditional clothes from across the country. Aarav plays a small drum while his friends twirl with happy ribbons in hand. Cheerful music fills the hall, connecting their hearts in a sweet song of unity.

Before going home, the teacher invites everyone outside to step into the school garden and plant a young mango tree sapling. As Aarav gently sprinkles fresh water onto the soil, he promises to care for nature and help his nation grow greener and brighter every day.

As the evening sun sets in a warm golden glow, Aarav stands under the floating flag with a proud smile. He knows that loving his country means spreading kindness, working hard, and respecting everyone. With a happy heart, Aarav softly whispers, I love my India!
