

Lily's Tender Tummy Day

Margaret Schabel

Lily sat curled on her soft rug, hugging her rumbling tummy, her colorful storybook lying open but forgotten. She looked a little pale, and her teddy bear sat close by, ready to offer fuzzy cuddles and quiet comfort for a sensitive stomach.

Her mom arrived with a warm smile, wrapping Lily in the coziest, patterned blanket that always felt like a giant hug. She whispered soothing words and gave Lily a reassuring squeeze, promising to help her feel better.

Mom brought a special tray with little sips of cool water and a slice of dry toast. Lily took tiny nibbles, feeling thankful for the simple treats that were gentle on her unsettled tummy.

To cheer Lily up, they painted a beautiful picture of a brave sun that warmed everything below. With each vibrant stroke of yellow and orange, Lily felt a spark of cheerfulness brighten her quiet afternoon indoors.

A lovely bunch of wild daisies appeared by her bed, brought by a kind neighbor who sent cheerful thoughts. The bright flowers made the room feel sunny, and Lily couldn't help but smile at their friendly faces.

As dusk painted the sky in soft hues, her dad read a gentle story about a calm river that sparkled under the moonlight. The soothing rhythm of his voice and the flowing words were like a lullaby, calming Lily's thoughts and helping her body relax.

Mom gently rubbed Lily's tummy with lavender-scented oil, the soothing warmth and sweet fragrance making her feel heavy-eyed and peaceful. Her teddy bear seemed to nod off too, cozy under his little blanket.

Tucked in her soft bed, surrounded by the warm glow of fairy lights, Lily drifted into dreams filled with colorful butterflies fluttering gracefully in a peaceful garden.

The next morning, Lily woke up feeling lighter and brighter than she had in days. She stretched towards the sunlight streaming in, her tummy finally feeling quiet and calm.

Lily ran outside to chase the happy, dancing butterflies, a joyful bounce in her step and a big, healthy grin on her face, ready for a brand new, wonderful day!