

Bambang the Busy Bee

HADDY PRIADY

High above a sun-kissed meadow, a tiny, fuzzy bee named Bambang buzzed excitedly. He stretched his six little legs and wiggled his antennae, ready for a brand new day of adventure and work.

With a cheerful hum, Bambang zipped out of his cozy hive, leaving behind his sleepy bee friends. The world outside shimmered with bright green leaves and a rainbow of blossoming flowers, waiting to be explored.

Bambang spotted a magnificent, bright red poppy with soft petals. He gently landed, his tiny legs tickling as he dipped his head deep inside, collecting sweet nectar and gathering golden pollen on his fuzzy body.

As Bambang moved from one part of the poppy to another, a tiny cloud of yellow pollen drifted from his legs and landed softly on the flower's center. He didn't even notice, too busy enjoying the sugary treat.

A wise old ladybug with sparkling wings landed beside Bambang. She explained how the pollen he carried helped the flower make tiny seeds, which would grow into new plants and more beautiful flowers.

Next, Bambang discovered a sprawling apple tree, covered in delicate pink and white blossoms. Each flower promised a future juicy apple, but only if they received a special visit.

Bambang danced from blossom to blossom, his fuzzy body busily transferring pollen. He hummed a happy tune, knowing he was helping the tree grow delicious apples for everyone to enjoy.

Days turned into weeks, and the little blossoms on the apple tree transformed. Where once there were delicate petals, now plump, shiny red apples hung heavy on the branches, ready for picking.

In a sunny park, children laughed and played, enjoying a picnic. They munched on crisp apples, sweet berries, and crunchy carrots – all thanks to the hard work of bees like Bambang!

As the sun began to set, Bambang flew back to his hive, his little legs tired but his heart full. He knew his buzzing work made the world a more beautiful and delicious place, one flower at a time.
