

LEO & THE MAGICAL CAT

MAGICAL ADVENTURE

Leo and the Magic Past-o-Matic

Amany Badr

Leo, a curious boy with messy hair, discovers a shimmering silver camera hidden in a dusty attic corner. A small, glowing tag attached to the camera reads 'The Past-o-Matic' in elegant, swirling script.

Leo tries to take a photo of a bright yellow butterfly landing on a flower, but the camera shutter refuses to click. He looks puzzled, realizing the camera does not want to capture the present moment; it only looks for things that are finished.

His little sister finishes a colorful drawing of a sun and puts down her crayon on the wooden table. Leo points the camera and shouts, 'You draw a sun!' but the device remains silent and still.

He remembers his teacher's lesson about adding '-ed' to actions that are already finished. He tries again, saying, 'You painted a sun!' and a brilliant flash of light fills the room as a photo slides out of the camera.

Leo steps into the garden and skips all the way to a large, ancient oak tree. He looks at the camera and whispers, 'I skipped to the tree,' and the camera clicks happily, capturing his joyful journey.

He watches his fluffy cat, Whiskers, finish a long nap and stretch her paws on the porch. 'Whiskers rested well,' Leo says, and another perfect photo of the sleepy cat pops out of the magic device.

Later, Leo encounters some tricky words that do not like the '-ed' ending at all. These are the 'Irregulars,' funny little characters who change their names entirely when they talk about the past.

Leo takes a big bite of a juicy red apple and swallows it with a satisfied smile. Instead of saying 'I ate,' he laughs and says, 'I ate the apple!' and the camera captures the moment of the finished snack perfectly.

As the sun sets, Leo sits on his bed with a large scrapbook titled 'My Past Adventures.' He carefully glues in his photos, each one representing a beautiful memory that has already happened.

Leo tucks the magic camera under his pillow, feeling proud of his new way of telling stories. He falls asleep dreaming of all the wonderful adventures he will have tomorrow, just so he can talk about them in the past later.
