

The Secret of the Blue Door

Petra Pazderova

Petra Pazderova

Leo and Mia stand in front of the large central station in a new city. They hold a paper map and look at the busy streets where many people are walking quickly.

"We are going the wrong way," Leo says while looking at a tall clock tower in the distance. They turn around and walk past a modern shopping mall with many bright windows.

Mia stops a kind woman and asks, "Excuse me, can you tell us the way to the Old Bridge?" The woman smiles and points to a street behind a beautiful old building.

The teenagers reach a big square with a fountain and many people sitting on benches. There are shops and cafes everywhere, but the two friends are busy looking for a house with a blue door.

They walk into a very narrow street with old stone walls and small windows. It is very quiet here, but they soon realize it is a dead end and they have to go back to the main road.

Mia points to a small sticker on a lamp post that has a secret symbol on it. "Look, we are on the right track! The map says we need to go through the park now," she says excitedly.

To save time, they decide to take the metro for one stop to get to the other side of the river faster. They look at the big map on the wall and wait for the train to arrive at the platform.

After leaving the station, they walk past a grand museum with white pillars and statues. Leo checks the map on his phone and tells Mia that their destination is only two hundred meters away.

They finally find a small, hidden street where a house with a bright blue door stands. Mia knocks on the door and they both feel very nervous and excited to find out what is inside.

The door opens and they enter a secret art gallery filled with amazing, colorful paintings. They find the special message they were looking for and smile at each other, happy with their successful adventure.