

The Talking Pencil

Bilal Ali

Leo was a little boy who absolutely loved to draw, scattering vibrant colors across sheets of white paper every single day. His desk was always filled with bright ideas, but his floor was often littered with forgotten, half-used art supplies.

Whenever Leo's colored pencils grew small and stubby, he would carelessly toss them into the trash bin. He believed that only big, shiny new tools were capable of creating the beautiful masterpieces he imagined.

One sunny afternoon, as Leo reached to throw away another tiny, worn-down pencil, he heard a faint, squeaky voice calling out to him. He froze in surprise, staring down at the little yellow pencil resting in his palm.

The tiny pencil looked up with a brave smile on its face and said, Please don't waste me, Leo! I may be small, but my lead is still sharp, and I can still help you create beautiful art if you give me a chance.

Astonished to hear a pencil speak, Leo decided to put it to the test and carefully pressed the small tip against a fresh sheet of paper. To his amazement, the pencil glided smoothly, leaving behind rich, bright, and perfect lines.

Leo became so captivated by the magic of the little pencil that he spent hours at his desk, carefully shading and sketching with a newfound focus. The tiny pencil worked tirelessly, turning Leo's imagination into reality.

By the time the sun began to set, Leo had finished a magnificent drawing of a soaring dragon and a brilliant rainbow. It was the most detailed and wonderful picture he had ever created, all thanks to the resource he almost threw away.

The next morning, Leo proudly took his new masterpiece to school to show all of his friends during recess. His classmates gathered around in awe, cheering and pointing at the incredible details of the artwork.

Leo held up the tiny yellow pencil and shared the secret of his masterpiece with his amazed friends. The little pencil winked gently at the crowd and whispered, Big or small, we all have value if we are used wisely.

From that day on, Leo never wasted his art supplies again, keeping a special box for his short pencils. He learned that every little resource is precious and that even the smallest things can make a big, beautiful difference in the world.
