A Touching Tale of Friendship and Self-Discover

Liza and the Emerald Kingdom

Виктор Бевза

A powerful whirlwind swept up Liza's small house and her loyal dog, Button, carrying them far beyond the horizon to an unknown land. The girl hugged her pet tightly, watching as her familiar garden disappeared into the clouds.

Liza found herself in a wondrous country where flowers could sing, and in a field stood an unusual scarecrow named the Straw Fox. He greeted her politely and confessed that more than anything in the world, he dreamed of having clever thoughts.

The girl helped the Fox down from his pole, and together they set off along the yellow brick road in search of the Great Magician. The Fox hopped along happily, hoping he would soon become the smartest animal in the forest.

In a thick thicket, they came across a motionless Iron Wolf whose paws were frozen by rust. Liza carefully oiled his joints, and for the first time in many years, the Wolf was finally able to move.

The Iron Wolf shared that he dreamed of a real heart capable of feeling love and compassion. He joined the company, promising to protect his friends with his strong steel body as they continued their journey.

At the edge of the forest, the friends met a huge but very sad Bear who hid behind bushes from every passing butterfly. The Cowardly Bear confessed that he desperately wanted to be brave so he could protect the weak.

Now there were five of them: Liza, Button, the Fox, the Wolf, and the Bear marched forward together, overcoming deep ravines and rushing rivers. Each of them supported the others, sharing their last bit of food and offering kind words of encouragement.

Finally, the towers of the Emerald City appeared in the distance, shimmering in the sun with every shade of green. The friends stood in awe, realizing that their goal was very close and their dreams were within reach.

The Great Magician revealed a secret: the Fox had already become wise, the Wolf kind, and the Bear brave through their shared adventures. Liza realized that true power had always been within them, and their friendship helped it bloom.

With the help of magical shoes, Liza and Button returned home to their beloved garden in a flash of light. She forever kept the memory of her wonderful friends and their amazing journey in her heart, knowing she was never truly alone.
