

Aanya's Green Voyage

Rajnandini Rananavare

Aanya, with eyes as bright as a sunny day, was full of curiosity about the world around her, especially how things worked.

Her grandfather, a wise old man with stories for every occasion, often spoke of Mother Nature's incredible gifts and the balance we must keep.

One day, Aanya's curiosity led her to the busy sawmill where huge logs were processed. 'Look, Grandpa!' she exclaimed, 'This is where we get the wood for my bed!'

Grandpa nodded and explained that the wood came from the surrounding forests, which provided homes for animals and clean air for everyone. 'These forests are precious, Aanya,' he said.

Curiosity about other resources soon followed. Next, Aanya saw a farmer working diligently in his lush green fields, tending to crops that would soon become delicious food.

'The soil, Aanya,' Grandpa said, kneeling down, 'is another precious resource. It gives us the food we eat, so we must care for it wisely.'

On a hot afternoon, a refreshing glass of water sparked Aanya's curiosity again. Grandpa took her to the river flowing gracefully near their village, explaining that fresh water is a vital resource for life.

'Water is not just for drinking, it helps things grow and provides a home for fish and plants,' he emphasized, showing Aanya how the river teems with life.

Later, while walking past an ancient, weathered rock face, Grandpa paused. 'Inside these rocks, Aanya, are valuable minerals used to make many things we see around us, like metal and glass.'

Feeling inspired and a little more grown-up, Aanya realized how connected everyone is to the gifts of natural resources and decided to do her part in protecting them for generations to come.