Peter the Penguin stands on a flat, snowy plain, holding a smooth block of ice with his flippers. He is surrounded by large, simple ice blocks waiting to be used for his project. The background features clean, open lines of snowdrifts, making the landscape perfect for coloring.

Peter carefully stacks the ice blocks into a circular pattern, showing deep concentration on his face. The scene focuses on the structure of the igloo, with bold, clear lines defining the individual ice blocks for easy coloring.

The finished igloo stands tall and round with a welcoming arched doorway. Peter stands to the side, looking at his work with pride, leaving plenty of white space in the background for coloring the winter sky.

Sonny the Seal waddles onto the scene from the left, looking happy and playful. He is drawn with simple, rounded shapes and a cheerful smile, ready to explore the snowy landscape near the igloo.

Sonny is caught in a moment of motion, his flippers up in the air as he loses his balance on a patch of slippery ice. The perspective shows him tumbling forward, with simple motion lines that are fun to color.

A close-up view shows the igloo tipping over, with ice blocks scattering in the air around a surprised-looking Sonny. The shapes are dynamic yet clearly defined, creating a fun and slightly chaotic scene for coloring.

Sonny sits in the snow looking apologetic with his head hung low, while Peter stands nearby, looking surprised. The contrast between the two animals is clear, providing a great opportunity to use different colors for each character.

Peter reaches out a flipper to help Sonny up, and they are both smiling at each other. This scene features simple, clean lines focusing on the beginning of their friendship and the act of helping.

The two friends are working together, with Peter lifting a block and Sonny pushing it into place. The teamwork is clear, and the composition is balanced and easy to color with distinct areas for each animal.

The rebuilt, sturdy igloo stands proudly again, with Peter and Sonny sitting happily together in front of it. The final scene is peaceful and inviting, with plenty of detail for a satisfying and colorful finish.
