

Brownie and the Secret Burrow

Shane Jaravata

Brownie is a scruffy, golden-brown dog walking down a long, dusty road under the hot afternoon sun. His stomach rumbles loudly as he searches for something to eat, feeling more tired and hungry with every step he takes.

As he trots along, Brownie whispers to himself, dreaming of finding a secret place filled with his favorite treats. He imagines a hidden spot where he can eat until he is finally satisfied and happy.

At the very end of the road, Brownie spots a small, inviting opening leading into a cozy-looking burrow. His eyes light up with excitement as he realizes it might be the answer to his hungry prayers.

Inside the burrow, Brownie discovers a mountain of delicious food left behind by travelers. Without a second thought, he dives into the feast, wagging his tail wildly as he enjoys the unexpected treasure.

Even after his hunger is completely gone, Brownie continues to gulp down every last morsel he can find. He ignores the feeling of being full and greedily eats everything until the burrow is totally empty.

Brownie's belly has grown so large and round that it looks like a giant balloon about to pop. He lets out a loud, satisfied burp and decides it is finally time to wiggle back out and head home.

When Brownie reaches the narrow entrance, he realizes with a shock that he is now too wide to fit through the opening. He pushes and squeezes with all his might, but his big tummy keeps him stuck tight in the doorway.

Feeling scared and trapped, Brownie begins to howl and bark loudly, hoping someone will hear his cries for help. A passing dog hears the noise and stops by the entrance to see what the commotion is about.

The wise passing dog looks at Brownie's round belly and explains that he must simply wait for his stomach to shrink. He gives Brownie a knowing look about being too greedy and walks away, leaving him to wait patiently.

After many hours of waiting, Brownie's stomach finally returns to its normal size, allowing him to easily squeeze out of the burrow. He trots away into the sunset, promising himself never to take more than he needs again.
