PRINCESS ROSALIND'S GRAND ANNOUNCEMENT

THE MORNING EVERYTHING CHANGED

Every morning, King Azfaran finds his twelve daughters' shoes worn to pieces, as if they had danced all night long. Despite the grand white marble walls of Saltanat-e-Mahin, a heavy mystery hangs over the palace. The princesses appear innocent by day, but their eyes are heavy with a fatigue they cannot explain.

The twelve princesses gather in the golden light of the palace balcony, wearing their elegant gowns of red, blue, and gold. While they smile for their father, they struggle to stay awake, their silk slippers already frayed at the edges. Their feet are visible as they rest on the marble floor, showing the wear and tear of a secret journey.

The proud Prince Farman arrives at the palace, boasting that he will be the one to uncover the secret of the worn-out shoes. However, as night falls, a magical mist fills the room, and he falls into a deep, enchanted slumber before the mystery even begins.

Theo, a humble shepherd with a clever mind and a kind heart, hides quietly beneath a bed to keep watch. He stays perfectly still as the clock strikes midnight, his eyes wide with anticipation while the rest of the palace falls into a magical sleep.

Suddenly, the eldest princess taps her bedpost, and a magnificent golden door appears within the glowing white marble wall. Theo watches in silence as the twelve sisters line up and step through the shimmering portal into the unknown.

Theo follows them through a shimmering silver hallway that leads into a magical forest where the trees are made of pure silver. Fireflies float through the air like glowing words, lighting the path toward a secret world hidden from the rest of the kingdom.

At the edge of a glowing lake, twelve golden boats wait to carry the princesses across the water. Theo quietly hitches a ride on the last boat, feeling the magical energy hum beneath the surface of the crystal-clear lake under the dark blue night sky.

In a grand crystal hall that sparkles like diamonds, the princesses begin to dance with mysterious shadow princes under a canopy of stars. The music is hauntingly beautiful, and the princesses spin in their vibrant gowns, trapped in a rhythm they cannot break.

Theo uses the magical river water he collected to reveal the truth behind the enchantment. As he sprinkles the water, the shadow princes turn into harmless smoke, and the heavy spell finally lifts, leaving the princesses gasping in surprise and relief.

As the warm morning sun rises over Saltanat-e-Mahin, the princesses stand freely in the palace garden with Theo by their side. They are no longer tired or bound by spells, but they carry the secret of the magic realm as a happy memory they can now visit on their own terms.
