

Millie Lilly: The Royal Egg's Great Fall

Ahmad Naqib Adha Ahmad Lizam

In the heart of the Golden Shell Kingdom lived Princess Millie Lilly, a highly pampered and wealthy egg girl who wore a tiny, glittering diamond tiara. She spent her days lounging on satin pillows in the palace gardens, surrounded by servants who catered to her every whim.

One sunny afternoon, Millie Lilly met her friends by the ancient, towering stone wall that bordered the royal courtyard. Her friends giggled and whispered, pointing up at the dizzying height of the stone structure.

One of the mischievous duke's sons pointed at the top of the wall and dared Millie Lilly to stand on it without falling. Feeling her royal pride slighted, Millie Lilly scoffed, adjusted her sparkling tiara, and accepted the challenge without a second thought.

With the help of her loyal guards, Millie Lilly scrambled up the steep stone steps until she reached the very peak of the high wall. She stood tall on her fragile porcelain feet, looking down at her amazed friends with a smug, triumphant grin.

Swept up in the excitement, Millie Lilly began to dance and show off, twirling around on the narrow stone ledge. She waved her arms grandly, ignoring the gentle breeze that began to sway her round, fragile body.

Suddenly, Millie Lilly's shiny shoe slipped on a patch of loose moss at the edge of the wall. Her eyes widened in absolute terror as she lost her balance, her tiny hands reaching out for a support that wasn't there.

With a loud gasp from the crowd below, Millie Lilly tipped over the edge and plunged through the air. The wind rushed past her as her glittering tiara flew off her head, tumbling down into the courtyard.

Millie Lilly hit the hard cobblestone ground with a loud, resounding crack that echoed throughout the palace gardens. She lay still as her pristine, wealthy shell split into two distinct top and bottom halves.

All the king's horses and all the king's men came rushing out of the palace gates, their armor clanking loudly in panic. They gathered around the fallen princess, frantically trying to figure out how to put the spoiled royal egg back together again.

As the royal doctors worked carefully with golden glue and silk bandages, Millie Lilly looked at her friends and managed a small, humbled smile. She realized that being safe on the ground with true friends was much better than showing off on a dangerous wall.