

A Cozy Day in the Big Den

Shailee Vruti Shah

Mama Bear stands tall and sturdy, scanning the forest with a watchful gaze. She sees her two small cubs tumbling happily in a soft patch of bright green grass nearby.

With a gentle huff, Mama Bear calls to her playful cubs. They quickly stop their game and run to her side, ready for their next adventure.

The cubs follow closely behind their mother's large, protective form. A dark opening in a hillside, their cozy den, awaits them at the end of the forest path.

Mama Bear watches over her cubs as they enter the den's mouth. She pushes aside some branches with her snout, making sure the way is clear and safe for them.

Inside, the den is vast and deep, like a secret cave. Soft light filters in, highlighting the dry, leafy bed waiting in the center of the large earthen room.

Mama Bear settles down with a sigh, her large body filling much of the comfortable den. She sits on the soft moss and leaves, watching her cubs explore.

The cubs sniff around the rocky walls, discovering tiny crawling beetles and flitting moths. The small creatures spark the cubs' curiosity, and they watch them intently.

With clumsy paws and excited leaps, the cubs chase the little bugs across the den floor. They tumble and scramble, their small paws batting at the quick insects.

High on the ceiling, silent black bats hang sleeping in the dark shadows. The cubs tilt their heads, gazing up at the mysterious, still creatures they cannot reach.

Tired from their play, the cubs curl up close to their mother. Mama Bear wraps her large, warm paws around them, and they all fall into a deep, peaceful sleep in their snug den.
