

coloring pages for adults

Mu Ryan

Leo sat at his cluttered desk, a frown on his face. Papers piled high, and his mind felt just as messy. He sighed, wishing for something exciting to happen.

As Leo cleared a space, his fingers brushed against something old. It was a crumpled, hand-drawn map, faded and childish. An 'X' marked a spot, and a squiggly line led the way.

The map's first clue led Leo to his own small garden. He knelt down, following the dotted line, and found a tiny, sparkling object hidden beneath a leaf. It shimmered with a soft, inviting glow.

A friendly squirrel chattered excitedly, eyeing the sparkling object in Leo's hand. Leo smiled and offered a piece of his snack to the squirrel. The little creature seemed to nod, then gestured with its nose further down the garden path.

The map showed a wide, winding river. In reality, it was a large puddle after a morning shower. Leo carefully stepped over it, pretending it was a grand, flowing waterway, a grin starting to form.

Next, the map pointed to a towering mountain. Leo looked up to see his own staircase, now transformed by his imagination. He climbed each step with a newfound spring in his stride, conquering the 'peak' with a chuckle.

A dark cave appeared on the map, leading Leo to his hallway closet. He peered inside the shadowy opening, a sense of childlike wonder returning. Amongst old coats, he found a forgotten toy car, a relic of younger days.

Finally, the 'X' on the map led Leo to an old, dusty box tucked away on a shelf. He carefully opened it, revealing a treasure trove of forgotten art supplies: bright crayons, soft brushes, and a stack of blank paper.

Leo sat down, a piece of paper before him and a colorful crayon in hand. He began to draw, simple lines forming shapes and figures. The joy of creation filled the room, washing away his earlier worries.

With a finished drawing in hand, Leo looked out his window. The world outside seemed brighter, full of new possibilities. He had found not just a treasure, but a spark within himself, ready to color his world anew.