

Barnaby's Big Library Dream

rifqy hafidz alvianto

A TALE OF FRIENDSHIP & DISCOVERY

THE ARCHITECTS OF TOMORROW

Imagination Builds Worlds

BARNABY & MS. HIGGINS ft. LUCA

Barnaby the Brontosaurus stood outside the Oakwood Library, his emerald-green scales shimmering under the warm morning sun. He peeked through the large glass windows, watching with wide, curious eyes as children carried stacks of colorful books.

BARNABY & MS. HIGGINS BUILD A COMMUNITY

With a gentle nudge, Barnaby pushed the heavy oak doors open, his long neck curling into the cozy, book-filled room. Ms. Higgins, the librarian, stared up from her desk, her spectacles slipping to the tip of her nose in pure amazement as the dinosaur offered a tiny library card.

Barnaby tried to help shelve a stray book, but his massive, sweeping tail accidentally sent a whole row of fairy tales tumbling to the floor. The loud clatter echoed through the quiet room, and Barnaby's face turned a soft shade of embarrassed pink as he realized how big he truly was.

A FRIENDLY ENCOUNTER
BARNABY & MS. HIGGINS

Feeling discouraged, Barnaby sat in the park where he noticed a group of children pointing sadly at the library's top-floor windows. The most exciting picture books were kept on the highest shelves, and the long, winding stairs were far too tiring for their little legs to climb.

A bright idea sparked in Barnaby's mind, and he hurried back to the library with a determined wag of his tail. He stretched his neck upward, reaching the high balcony perfectly, and let out a happy, low whistle to get the children's attention.

THE LIBRARY ADVENTURE

Ms. Higgins watched in awe as Barnaby became a living elevator, gently lifting the children up to the highest shelves on his broad, flat head. He moved with careful grace, ensuring every little reader felt safe and happy while they picked out their favorite stories.

During the afternoon story hour, Barnaby lay down in the library's garden, his long body creating a soft, scaly bench for everyone to sit on. He held a giant picture book open with his chin while Ms. Higgins read aloud to the captivated crowd of families.

THE ARCHITECT & THE INNOVATORS

When dark clouds gathered and a sudden rainstorm began to pour, Barnaby didn't seek shelter for himself. Instead, he arched his long neck and back over the outdoor book fair, acting as a giant, living umbrella to keep the readers and their precious books perfectly dry.

The next day, the Mayor arrived to present Barnaby with a shimmering golden medal shaped like a giant bookmark. The whole town gathered to cheer for their new Chief Library Assistant, and Barnaby let out a joyful rumble that sounded like a happy song.

THE ADVENTURE CONTINUES TOMORROW!

As the moon rose over the library, Barnaby curled up in his special spot outside the window, feeling perfectly at home. With a giant book tucked under his chin and a heart full of happiness, the dinosaur librarian finally drifted off to sleep under the stars.