Nia's Global Friendship Parade

Ahlem Sellali

Nia opens a magical book from her grandma, its cover shining with stars and world symbols. The pages glow as they turn, introducing children from many different countries.

First she meets Amina from Algeria, waving a green and white flag. Amina wears a vibrant embroidered dress called a Karakou and smiles warmly.

Next is Liam from Canada, proudly waving a red maple leaf flag. Liam wears a bright red tunic and holds a miniature hockey stick.

On the sunny page for France, Chloe waves the blue, white, and red tricolor flag. She wears a striped shirt and a jaunty red beret, holding a small flag.

In sunny Spain, Mateo waves the yellow and red striped flag. He wears a traditional matador outfit and smiles, striking a proud pose.

Alejandro from Mexico waves the green, white, and red flag with an eagle. He wears a massive sombrero and a colorful poncho, ready for a dance.

Next is Kenji from Japan, waving the simple red circle on a white background flag. He wears a blue kimono with waves printed on it and bows politely.

Haiti's vibrant blue and red flag is waved by Toussaint. He wears a white shirt and blue shorts, holding the flag high in front of lush green foliage.

ly, Nia joins all her new friends in a big parade. They wave their flags and laugh, marching together in a wonderful celebration of friendship from all around the world.
