

Bryan and the Great Pancake Chase

Jitka Osickova

Bryan stands in his kitchen wearing oversized chef goggles and a ridiculously tall white hat. He enthusiastically pours flour, milk, and eggs into a bowl that is far too small. White powder splashes everywhere, thoroughly coating the counter and his bright yellow socks.

Undeterred by the mess, Bryan pours the sticky batter into his skillet and turns the stove up high. A gigantic bubble inflates inside the pancake with a loud hiss, popping suddenly and launching a blob of dough onto his cat's nose.

It is finally time for the grand flip, so Bryan bends his knees and swings the skillet upwards with all his strength. The pancake shoots straight into the air, flies right past the kitchen light, and swoops out the open window.

Outside on the lawn, the giant golden pancake lands directly on top of Bryan's head like a warm floppy hat. He blinks in surprise as three curious squirrels gather around to admire his new breakfast headwear.

Bryan decides to march toward the park, determined to eat his extraordinary creation at a picnic table. Just then, a sudden gust of wind blows the pancake off his head and rolls it down the sidewalk like a wheel.

The runaway pancake bounces straight through the neighborhood dog park, causing a hilarious commotion among the startled pups. Bryan leaps through the air to catch it, missing completely and landing face-first in a patch of soft clover.

The pancake zooms past the park fountain, flips over a wooden bench, and splats directly onto an unfinished clay sculpture. Bryan catches up out of breath, staring in disbelief at the strange syrup-covered creature now sitting in the square.

A crowd of curious onlookers gathers around the pancake sculpture, breaking into enthusiastic applause at the brilliant artistic display. Local photographers rush over, snapping pictures of Bryan standing proudly beside his accidental masterpiece.

An art contest judge strolling through the park places a shiny blue ribbon on the syrup-drenched statue. She hands Bryan a glittering golden trophy, declaring his runaway pancake the winner of the community art festival.

Back home in his cozy dining room, Bryan sits happily at the table admiring his shiny new trophy. He shares a plate of fresh, delicious pancakes with his cat, who still wears a tiny spot of batter on its nose.