

Mia's Parisian Adventure

GINES SOLER NAVARRO

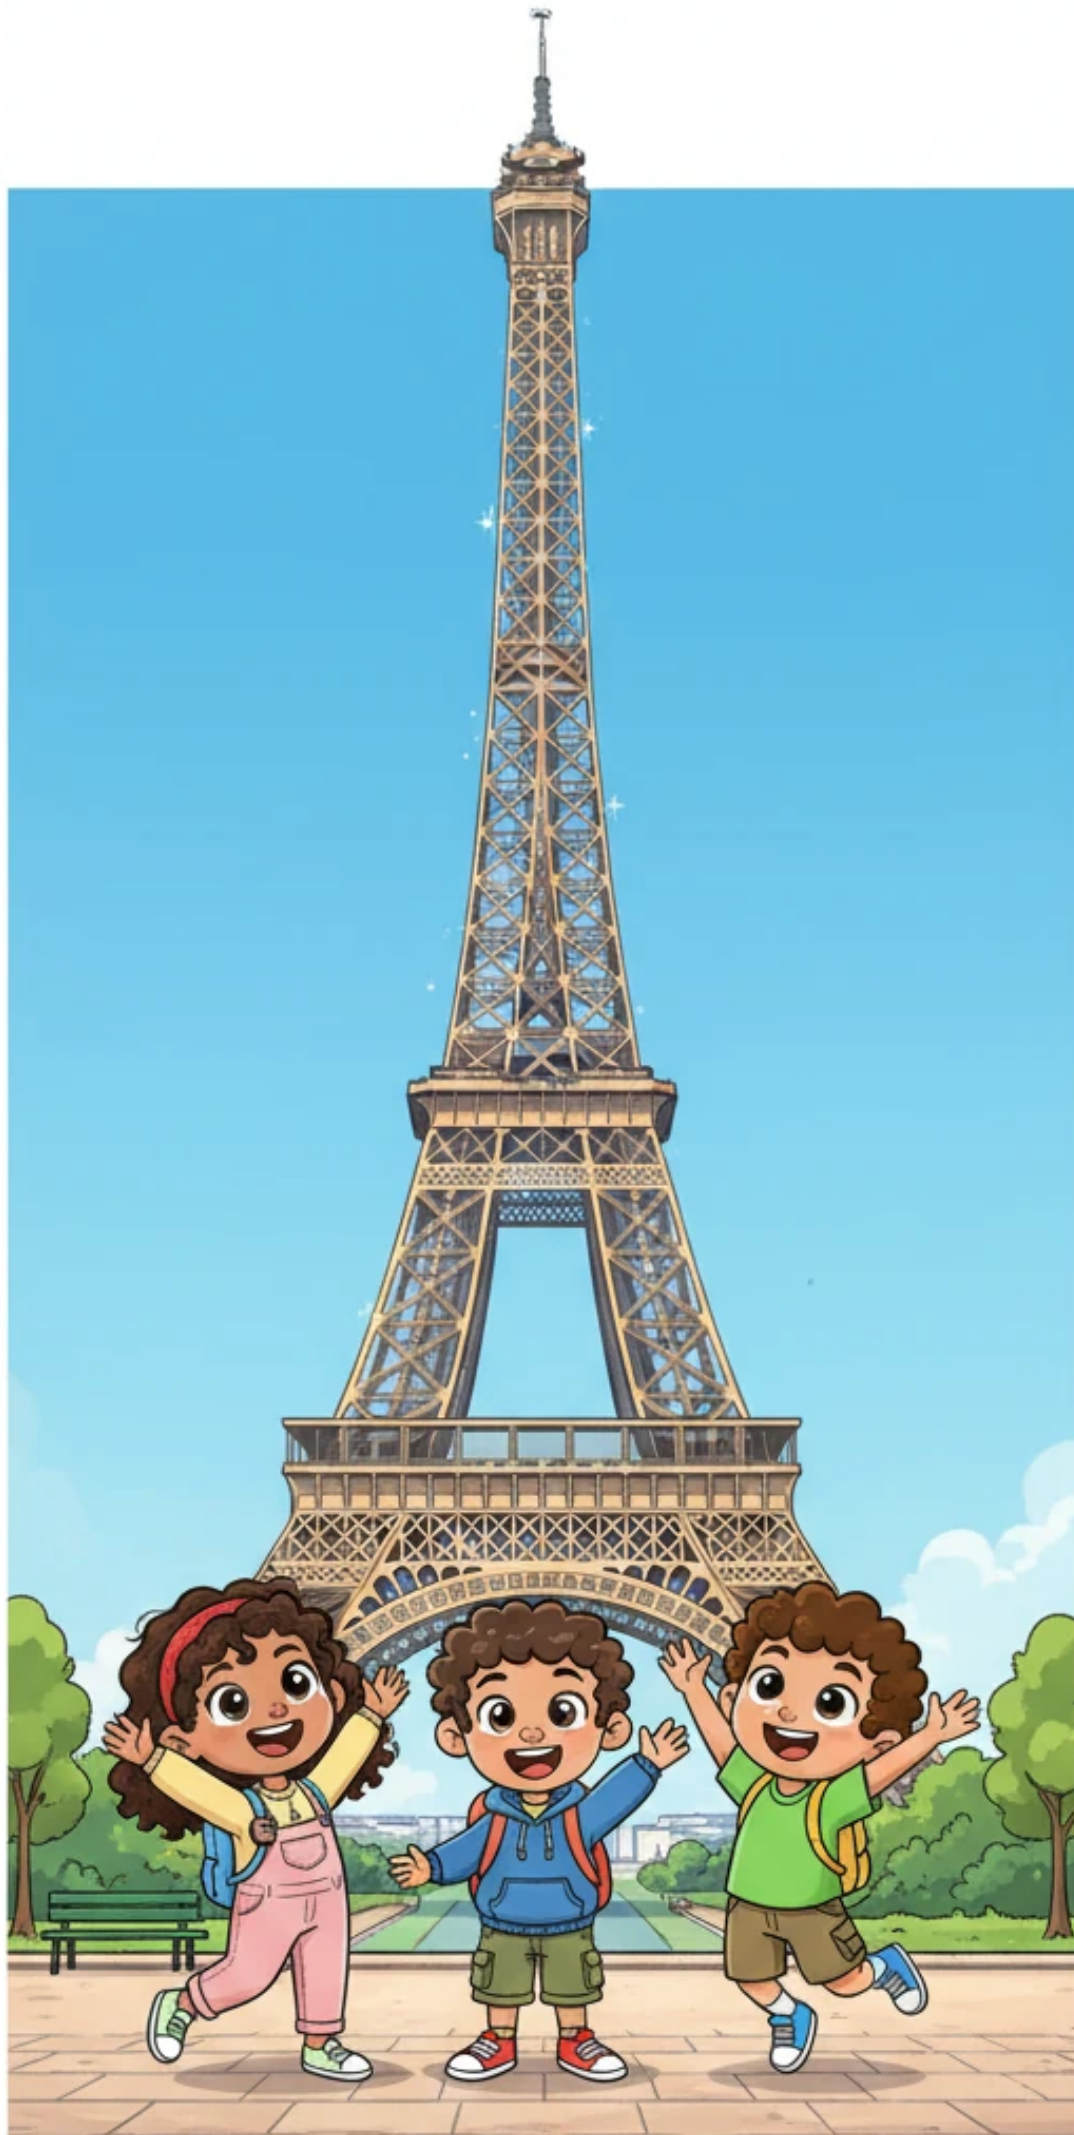

The students, Mario, Lara, Teo, Mia, Alba, and Juan, bounced with excitement in their classroom in Purias. Their teacher, a cheerful woman, held up a shiny map of Paris, pointing to all the amazing places they would soon see. Mia's eyes sparkled, dreaming of croissants and grand adventures.

Zoom! Their bright red bus, filled with happy chatter, finally pulled into Paris. Mia pressed her nose against the window, her jaw dropping at the sight of tall, elegant buildings and busy streets. The city felt like a giant, wonderful playground waiting to be explored.

First stop, the magnificent Eiffel Tower! It stretched high into the sky, sparkling like a giant diamond. Mia, Mario, and the others giggled as they looked up, feeling tiny next to the famous landmark. They waved excitedly from below, ready for their grand tour.

Next, they hopped onto a charming boat for a peaceful ride along the River Seine. Mia watched the city glide by, seeing old bridges and beautiful statues. Ducks paddled past, and everyone waved to people on the riverbanks, feeling the gentle breeze.

Inside the grand Louvre Museum, Mia spotted a painting of a lady with a mysterious smile. She whispered to Lara, wondering what secrets the painting held. The museum felt enormous, filled with incredible art and quiet wonder.

Lunchtime was the best! They sat at a little café, enjoying warm, buttery croissants and sweet crepes with chocolate. Mia took a big bite, her face covered in crumbs, declaring it the most delicious food ever. Everyone laughed, savoring their yummy treats.

They walked along the wide, bustling Champs-Élysées, a famous avenue lined with shops and trees. At the end stood the mighty Arc de Triomphe, a huge arch that made them feel like tiny explorers. They imagined parades marching through it long ago.

Up on a hill, they found Montmartre, a charming neighborhood with a beautiful white church called Sacre-Coeur. Artists painted colorful pictures on the streets, and Mia watched in awe as one quickly drew a funny caricature of Teo. The view of Paris from up high was breathtaking.

Time for souvenirs! Mia carefully chose a small, sparkly Eiffel Tower for her mom and a tiny beret for her teddy bear. Mario found a miniature bus, and Alba picked out a pretty postcard. Their bags were soon filled with happy memories to take home.

As the sun set, casting a warm glow over Paris, Mia and her friends boarded their bus, their hearts full. They waved goodbye to the twinkling city lights, promising to tell everyone in Purias about their amazing adventure. Paris would always be a special memory.