

Sarah's Special Prayer

Redisa Mahabub Faria

Little Sarah plays happily with her toys in a bright room. Her mother, Amina, folds colorful hijabs nearby, humming a gentle tune.

Amina gently takes Sarah's hand and sits her down. She uses a colorful picture book to tell a story about talking to Allah and the special connection through prayer.

Amina reveals a beautifully wrapped gift. Inside is a small, soft prayer mat with bright embroidery, which Sarah hugs tightly.

In the bathroom, Amina carefully washes Sarah's small hands and face, explaining the steps of wudu. Sarah mimics her actions, splashing water playfully.

Amina lays out her prayer mat and Sarah's. She shows Sarah how to stand with hands raised and then bow with reverence.

It's Fajr, and the house is quiet. Sarah, rubbing sleep from her eyes, joins her mother on the mats as the sky begins to turn orange.

Sometimes Sarah gets distracted during prayer, looking around. Amina just guides her eyes back gently, keeping a warm smile.

One afternoon, Amina is busy in the kitchen, but Sarah independently finds her prayer mat and starts praying, making her mother beam with pride.

As Ramadan arrives, the whole family prays Taraweeh together. Sarah feels part of something big and special, standing tall beside her mother.

Sarah is praying confidently on her mat, a peaceful expression on her face. Her mother watches from the doorway, her heart overflowing with gratitude and love.
