

Barnaby's Big Red Adventure

Rosdya Priyanti

A very small, fluffy brown bear named Barnaby was extraordinarily proud of the largest, reddest apple he had ever found. He held it tightly, dreaming of its sweet taste, while his tall friend Gerald the giraffe nibbled some leaves.

Barnaby and Gerald wanted to eat the magnificent apple together at their favorite sun-drenched clearing. Barnaby carefully pushed the heavy fruit with his little bear paws, and Gerald used his long nose to help steer it over logs and roots.

A wide, shallow creek appeared, blocking their path to the clearing. Gerald, being very tall, easily stepped across and then gracefully stretched his neck over the water like a bridge, enabling Barnaby to safely carry his precious cargo across.

Reaching their sunny spot, they sat down and shared the big red apple, taking joyful bites. The sweet juice spilled down their chins as they decided that sharing things with a best friend makes them even more special.
