

coloring pages for teens

Mu Ryan

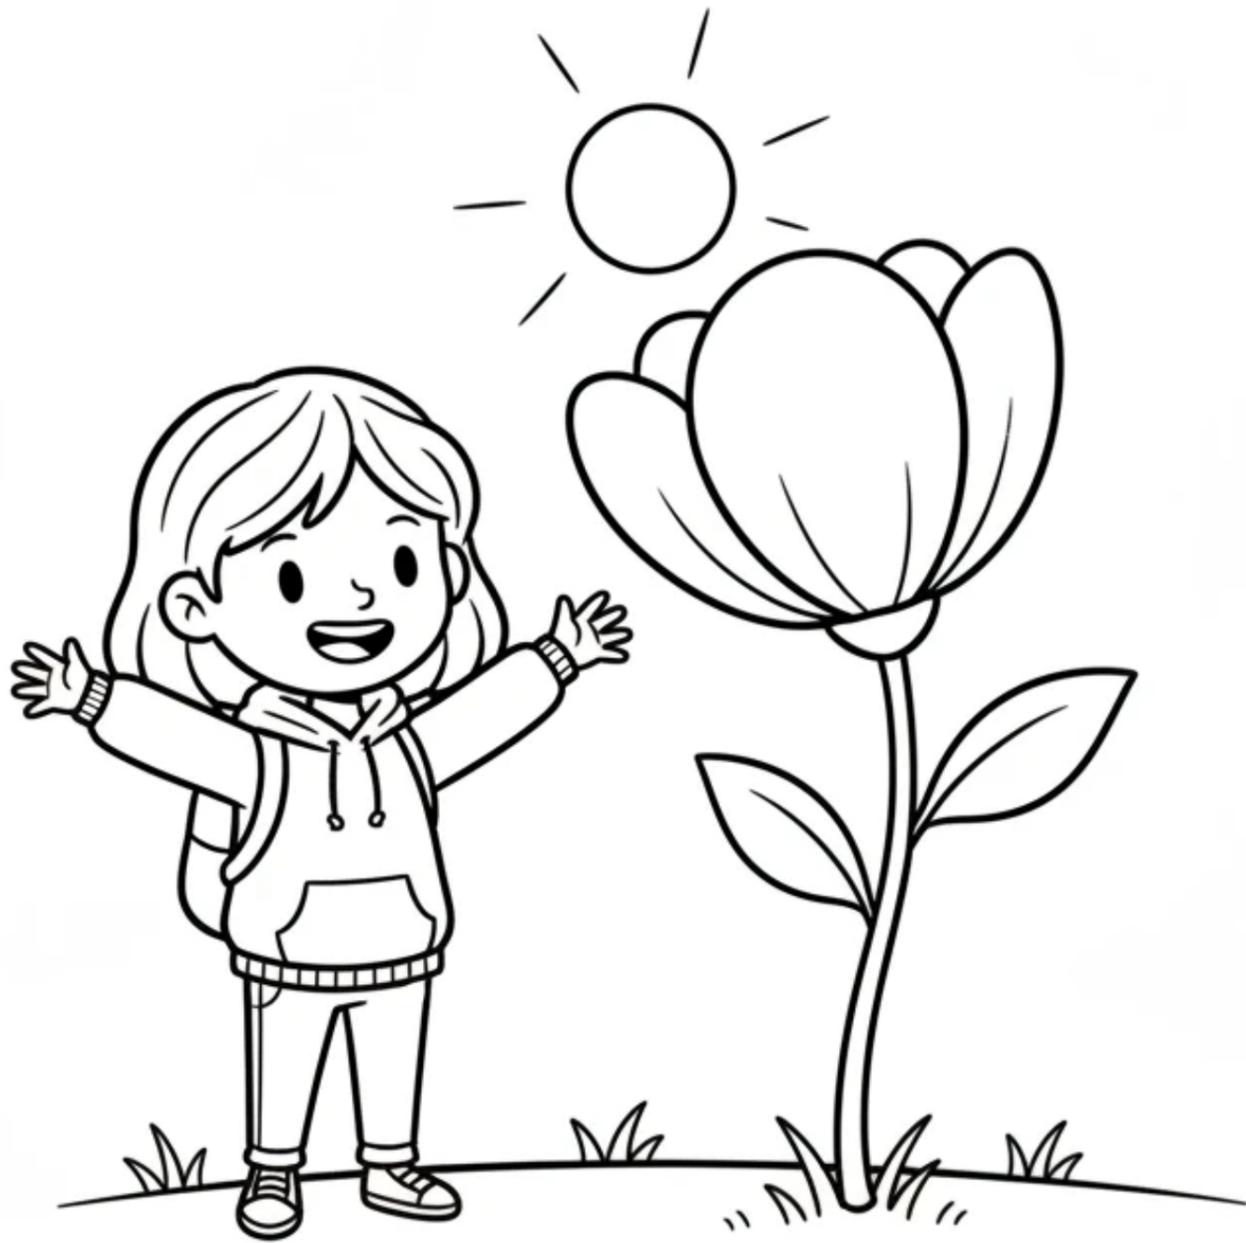

Lily sits alone on a small hill, watching other children play in the distance. Her round face holds a thoughtful expression as she gently taps her tiny fingers together. The world seems bright, but she feels a little quiet today.

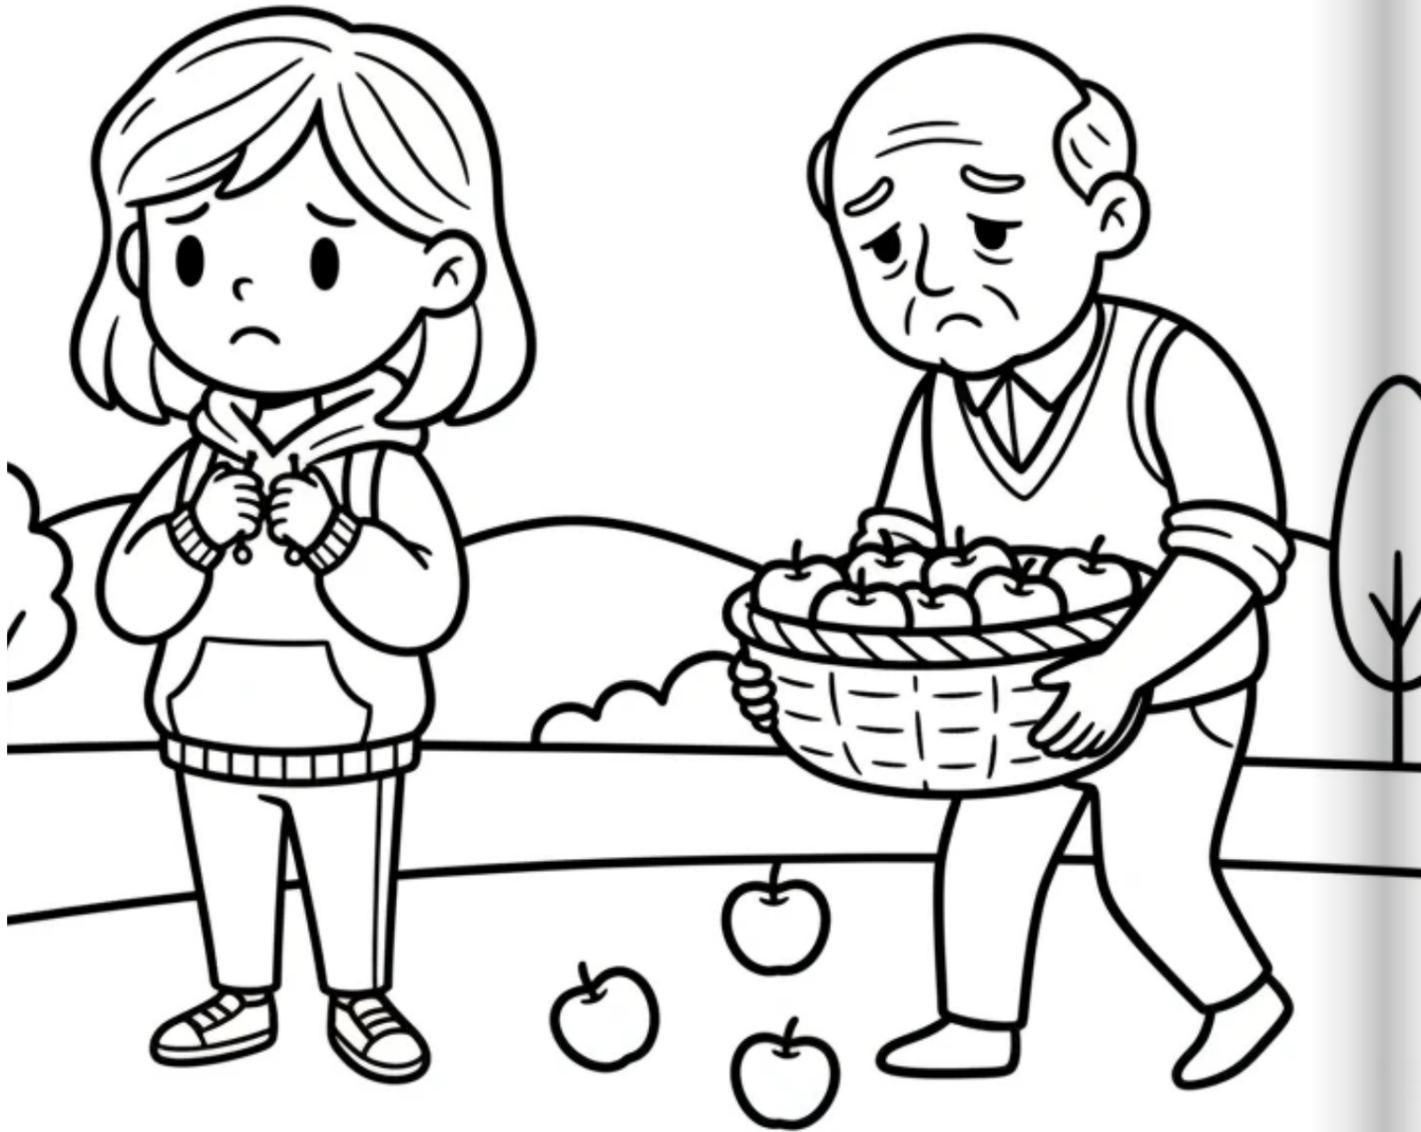

As she walks, Lily spots a small, wilting flower by the path. Its single petal droops sadly towards the ground. She stops, her bright eyes noticing its need for care.

A tiny watering can appears in Lily's hand, and she carefully tilts it. A gentle stream of water rains down on the thirsty plant. Lily watches with focused attention, hoping her small action will help.

The next morning, Lily returns to find the flower standing tall and vibrant. Its petals unfurl towards the sun, a picture of happy health. A wide, joyful smile spreads across Lily's face.

Later, Lily sees an older friend, Mr. Pips, struggling with a large basket of apples. His arms are full, and a few apples threaten to tumble out. He looks a little tired as he walks slowly.

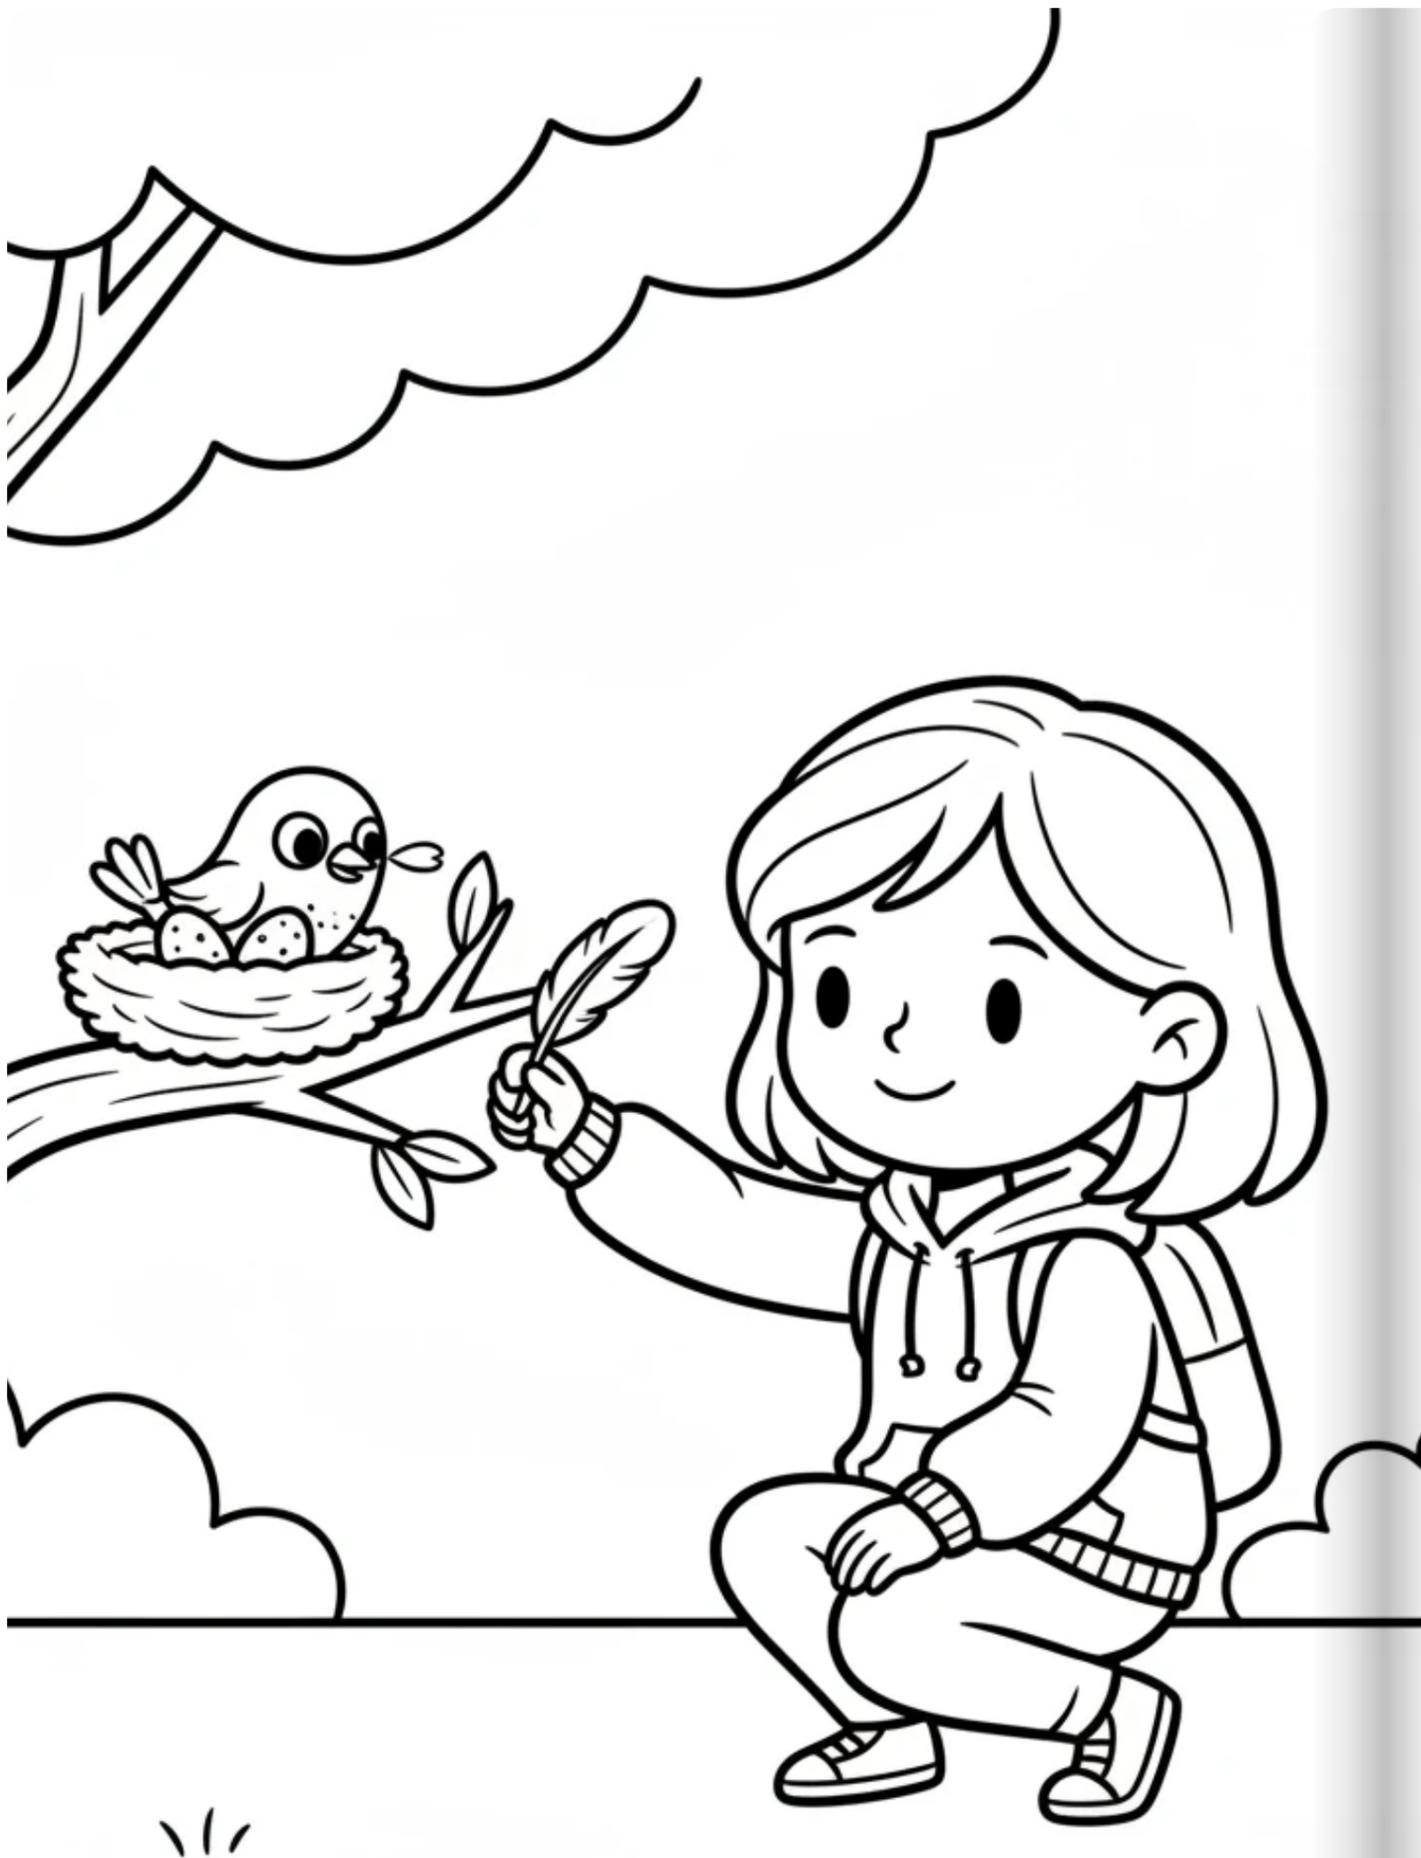

Without a word, Lily steps forward and gently takes a few apples from the overflowing basket. She carefully places them into her own small, empty basket. Mr. Pips looks down, surprised.

Together, they walk to Mr. Pips' cozy cottage. He beams at Lily, his kind eyes twinkling with gratitude. Lily feels a warm, happy feeling blooming in her chest, like the flower she watered.

High above, Lily notices a little bird fluttering frantically around a half-built nest. It tries to carry a long twig, but it keeps slipping from its beak. The bird looks quite frustrated.

Lily carefully finds a soft, fluffy feather on the ground. She places it gently on a low branch near the bird's nest. The little bird pecks at it curiously, then picks it up easily.

Soon, the bird's nest is complete, soft and warm with the feather inside. The bird chirps a happy song from its new home. Lily watches from below, a radiant glow surrounding her, knowing her small acts made the world a little brighter.